CARTER WILL GO TO PUBLIC SCHOOL IN WHITE HOUSE

MENT IS MAINLY BLACK

Tells of Education Plans for Year 9—President-Elect to Hold More Transition Talks

By JAMES T. WOOLEN

Special to The New York Times
SACRAMENTO, Nov. 28—The 9-year-old daughter of President-elect Jimmy Carter will attend a predominantly black school in Washington after she is inaugurated. It was announced today.

Ms. Carter, now a fourth grader at Mary School in nearby Plains, Ga., is enrolled in a public school in the White House after she moves to Washington in January. Almost a third of the pupils in the school are the children of foreign diplomats assigned to Washington.

Ms. Carter will become the first child of a President to study in a public school since Theodore Roosevelt's daughter did so more than seven decades ago.

Statement by Mother Read

Ms. Carter's decision to send her daughter to Stevens School came in part from her mother, Rosalynn Carter, who was read to reporters here yesterday by Mr. Carter's press secretary.

Ms. Carter was to have made the announcement personally but was described as suffering from a "slight irritation of the eyes, perhaps an allergic reaction."

For the first time in months, Mrs. Carter attended worship services at the First Baptist Church today. Despite a heavy rain, scores of tourists waited outside for a quick glimpse of the president-elect arriving and departing.

Meeting on Inaugural Plans

Ms. Carter met with the principal of her school before beginning her week of transitional conferences with a foreign policy adviser. Scores of tourists waited outside for a quick glimpse of the president-elect arriving and departing.

Ms. Carter, according to Mr. Powell, will meet with her economic advisers at her home in Plains, Ga., on Tuesday. She will also meet with her administrative and press offices on Wednesday.

Carter to Inherit Executive Branch Shaped by G.O.P.

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Nov. 28—The Government that Jimmy Carter will inherit on Jan. 20 is not the one Lyndon Johnson left behind.

Between Democratic Presidents, the executive branch has changed. But so have many Democrats, becoming less dogmatic and more pragmatic. And for President-elect Carter, there are unusual opportunities in the convergence of a Government and a political party in a state of transition.

No one knows specifically how Mr. Carter, an activist pledged to help the poor and powerless, might adapt new pragmatic attitudes in his party to the pursuit of traditional liberal goals. Some political observers believe, however, that the next Democratic administration is less likely merely to pick up where President Johnson left off than to try to reported the deaths or about any aspect of his interrogation. Mr. De La Roche was a sales representative for Ford Motor Company and worked with several other men in the company's international sales division at the Ford offices in Newark, processing foreign orders.

The family had lived in the home at 23 East Grand Avenue since 1962 or 1963, according to a neighbor, Harold Buscher, of 27 East Grand Avenue. The flagstone home, of red clapboard, with a flagstone foundation, stands on a tree-lined road in a rustic atmosphere, where

MAYORS' GROUP ASKS $3.5 BILLION IN WORKS

League of Cities Appeals to Carter to Inaugurate Jobs Program

By ERNEST HOLSENDOERF

Special to The New York Times
DENVER, Nov. 28—Leaders of the nation's largest organization of city officials called today for the incoming administration of Jimmy Carter to begin a $3.5 billion public works program to create employment in deteriorating cities.

This would be better than a tax cut, Hans G. Tanzler Jr., president of the National League of Cities, said, because "the effect of an expanded jobs program would be immediate, and it would have a multiplier effect on the economy."

Mr. Tanzler made his statement as the league opened its annual convention here. He told reporters that his organization expected President Ford to include a tax cut in his budget and that President-elect Carter was likely to concur with it.

"But we feel that an expansion of public works should be part of any approach to stimulating the economy," Mr. Tanzler, who is Mayor of Jacksonville, Fla., said.

He reported that cities had already submitted applications for $15 billion in Federal aid, though Congress recently approved only $2 billion over a Ford veto. The league, according to a statement,

Some Hospitals Establish Funds To Replace Malpractice Insurance

By NANCY HICKS

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Nov. 28—In professional jargon, it is called "going bare," and an increasing number of hospitals around the country are doing it. They are dropping their expensive malpractice insurance and are underwriting their own risk against suit.

The decision is being made by a growing but still unknown number of hospitals that have had good records in the malpractice area but have suffered because of the astronomical rate increases that have often produced premiums higher than the coverage they buy.

The hospitals are being helped by a proposed Federal Medicare regulation that would allow hospitals with actuarially sound trusts to insure themselves against malpractice.

AUSTRALIA DEVALUES CURRENCY BY 17.5%

Move Designed to Aid Reserves and Nation's Export Products

By The Associated Press

SYDNEY, Australia, Nov. 28—Australia devalued its currency today in a move aimed at making its wool, meat and other exports more competitive on the world market, stimulating foreign investment and bolstering sagging foreign reserves.

The Australian dollar was devalued by a peacetime record 17 1/2 percent, giving it a new value of $1.0174 in American money. This was a sharp cut from its official value of $1.2354 at the end of trading Friday.

[Monetary officials in Washington regarded the action as a further sign of turbulence in the world's currencies. They expected the devaluation to make American exports to Australia less competitive while lowering the cost of many Australian goods paid for with United States dollars.]

The devaluation should make such prime Australian products as wool, beef, lamb and wheat cheaper abroad in the immediate future. It may also make it cheaper for tourists to visit what is considered one of the most expensive destinations in the world.

Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser's Conservative Government ordered the devaluation after resisting it for months as unnecessary. The decision was welcomed

Young Couple and 2 Sons Slain; Third Son, 18, Held in Murders

Special to The New York Times
LE, N. J., Nov. 28—A father, a mother, apparently a wardrobe, in the attic of the two-story home, Dr. Denson said.

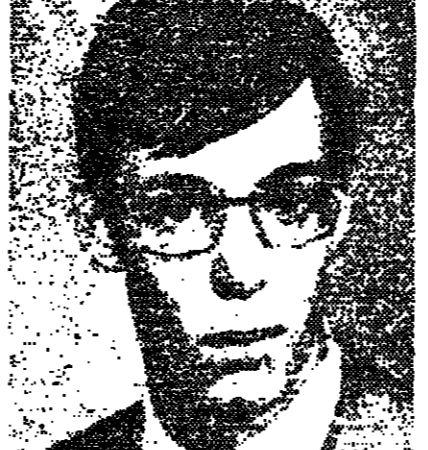

George Michael Hecker, Montvale Chief of Police, said that Harry Jr. had been formally charged with murder and taken to the Bergen County Jail in Hackensack at 6:30 tonight.

The suspect had been questioned by Joseph C. Woodcock, Bergen County Prosecutor, and the Montvale police. He was given a lie-detector test before charges were filed against him. The state police, under Detective Sgt. Lou Parisi of the major-crime unit, also took part in the investigation.

Hearing Is Set for Today
Young Mr. De La Roche was held last night in the Bergen County Jail pending a hearing tomorrow to determine whether he needs a court-appointed lawyer and to set bail.

"The young man apparently came home at 3 A.M. and shot his parents and two brothers while they were sleeping," Mr. Woodcock said last night.

Earlier, investigators had said there was no sign of forcible entry into the family home. Chief Hecker declined to say anything about how Harry Jr. had Harry De La Roche Jr., charged with murdering his family.

Ex-Editor of 'Voice' To Buy The Nation

By ROBERT D. McFADDEN

Thomas B. Morgan, who resigned last month as editor of The Village Voice, has agreed to purchase The Nation, the 111-year-old weekly journal of liberal commentary and iconoclasm, the magazine's publisher, James J. Storrow Jr., announced yesterday.

The purchase price was not disclosed, but a source familiar with the arrangements said Mr. Morgan would acquire ownership by assuming the magazine's liabilities, estimated at $100,000 to $150,000.

The deal is to be closed with a signing tomorrow, and Mr. Morgan will take over as editor and publisher on Jan. 1. Blair Clark, who succeeded Carey McWilliams as editor last year, will become editorial director, and Robert Hatch will stay on as executive editor.

Mr. Morgan, a writer and editor who served as press secretary to Mayor John V. Lindsay from 1969 to 1973, said in an interview that he planned to expand The

Peking Urges Restraint in 'Gang of 4' Drive

PEKING, Nov. 28 (Reuters)—China appealed for discipline and restraint today in the nationwide campaign against followers of the purged "Gang of Four." The appeal, in an editorial in the Jenmin Jih Pao, warned that people who had "made mistakes" should be cured, not killed.

It followed reports of serious factional problems and a widespread purge in the southeast province of Fukien.

"As far as comrades who have made mistakes are concerned, including those who have made serious mistakes, you should implement Chairman Mao's historic teaching, 'Cure the sickness to save the patient,'" the editorial said.

Many Troops Mobilized

"Permit them to correct their mistakes," it continued. "Do not beat them to death in the style of the Gang of Four." The four who have been purged are Chiang Ching, Mao Tse-tung's widow, Chang Chun-chiao, Wang Hung-wen and Yao Wen-yuan.

The editorial followed a broadcast on Fukien provincial radio, monitored in Hong Kong, which said that "large numbers" of troops had been mobilized in the region. The report indicated that the army was playing a major role in containing purges and quelling factionalism there.

Observers attributed the regional troubles largely to "moderate" provincial administrators taking the opportunity to purge leftists who had attacked them in the past.

In an apparent warning against widespread purges of leftists, today's editorial instructed people to minimize attacks and broaden the educational aspect of the campaign.

"Those comrades who have made mistakes must quickly be made aware of it," it said. "They must shift their position, separate themselves from the Gang of four and expose the gang's crimes."

Socialists Hear Third World Has Forced 'New Order'

Special to The New York Times
GENEVA, Nov. 28—Developing countries have already forced the emergence of a "new political order" based on their power to negotiate over raw material supplies, President Carlos Andrés Pérez of Venezuela told the world's Socialist parties here today.

President Pérez appeared on the last day of the Socialist International's 13th congress, stopping off on his way from Moscow to Madrid.

Since Venezuela is a member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, his stand carried special weight in the arguments favoring Socialist support for new and more generous relations between industrialized and developing countries.

While 52 countries are represented at the meeting, the core of the organization consists of parties that grew up with the Western world's industrial labor movement. There was a consensus among the delegates, however, that they must give more backing to the third world and expand their relations with it.

President Pérez put the choice bluntly. "We would not even like to think of what would happen" if the effort to redistribute resources between the rich and poor nations fails, he said. "The establishment of a new international economic order is a precondition for peace. Otherwise, the world's political equilibrium will be seriously threatened."

Wide Spectrum of Views
Although he gave no hint of what OPEC might decide at its next meeting on oil prices, Mr. Pérez said: "The increase of petroleum prices is by no means a selfish act of OPEC members for the exclusive benefit of their countries. It represents the irrevocable decision to dignify the terms of trade, to revalue raw materials and other basic products of the third world."

Like the Socialist International itself, the congress speeches and its final resolution reflected the wide spectrum of views held today by Socialist leaders.

The resolution on the political situation spoke of the "crisis in world capitalism and its consequences for the working class."

"In today's world," it said, "capitalism and Communism continue to express the major forms of oppression in modern society."

However, Egon Bahr, the secretary of West Germany's ruling Socialist party, said that the congress showed a drastic change from the orthodox Marxist language of the International's postwar meeting in Frankfurt 25 years ago.

Another leading delegate said that as the International had clearly moved closer to third-world aspirations, it had gained a special importance as one of the few groups that could help link developing countries with the West and assist them to resist pressures from the Communist bloc.

Warnings Against Communism
The Socialist Prime Minister of Portugal, Mario Soares, and Felipe González, leader of Spain's Socialist Workers Party, warned delegates against the dangers of Communism and stressed the need for Socialists to defend democratic rights.

Costa Rica's President, Daniel Oduber Quirós, who pointed out that the majority of countries in Latin America lived under dictatorships, said that "the greatest paradox is that the advocates of left-wing dictatorships think they are the only people struggling against right-wing dictatorships."

A special resolution on Latin America condemned the growing tendency toward military dictatorship there, with passages on the lack of human rights in Chile, Argentina, Brazil and many other countries.

It also called on the United States to VARBERG, Sweden, Nov. 28 (Reuters)—The police today defused a 44-pound dynamite bomb found next to the Ringhals nuclear power station on a peninsula near this town on Sweden's west coast. S. Macomber Jr., left, United States Ambassador to Turkey, greeting Secretary of Commerce Elliot L. Richardson arrival at Ankara, Turkey. More than 3,000 deaths have been reported since earthquake Wednesday.

Turkish Province Mobilized to Aid Quake Victims

By ERIC PACE
Special to The New York Times
Turkey, Nov. 28—The Turkish government announced drastic measures in earthquake-ravaged areas today, and Commerce Minister Elliot L. Richardson of the United States indicated in a statement that his country was ready to provide aid for the victims.

Mr. Richardson said tonight that the earthquake had shaken an area near Lake Van today, and that casualties were reported. Death toll remained at 3,600, announced late yesterday. Thousands are homeless.

Mr. Richardson is to meet here with Mr. Demirel tomorrow. United States Embassy officials reported today that the major portion of the American disaster aid earmarked for Turkey had been airlifted here from Europe.

Enough American relief supplies to fill about 25 C-130 military transport planes remained at an air base outside Adana this afternoon. The supplies were to be taken tomorrow to the small airport at Van.

Relief flights to Van were interrupted by snow from 2 A.M. to 3 A.M. today, but 11 relief flights landed during the day.

Other countries have been flying relief supplies to Turkey. Secretary Richardson, who flew here today from Belgrade, Yugoslavia, said on his arrival at Ankara: "We already are engaged in trying to assist in providing relief to the suffering victims of the earthquake, and I hope my visit here will identify other ways in which we can be of assistance."

Polish Bishops Charge Blackmail Is Being Used to Enforce Atheism

WARSAW, Nov. 28 (Reuters)—Poland's Roman Catholic bishops today challenged Communist claims of tolerance and charged that Catholic students were threatened and blackmailed under what they termed an official conspiracy to enforce atheism.

In a pastoral letter read in all Poland's Catholic churches, Stefan Cardinal Wyszyński and the bishops listed areas of conflict between church and state in this strongly religious country.

The bishops agreed on their letter at a meeting in September shortly after the Communist Party leader, Edward Gierek, moving to unify the country after food riots in the summer, told a workers' rally: "There are no conflicts between church and state, there is a broad field for fruitful cooperation. Such is the stand of our party and supreme authorities."

The bishops' response was delayed until now to avoid aggravating tension between workers and authorities.

Observers saw it as laying down terms for cooperation between the church, with its deep roots in nationalism, and the Communist Party, recovering from the shock of the summer protests.

The statement condemned attacks on religious faith as a violation of citizens' rights under international charters and the Polish Constitution.

A large majority of Poles are believers, it said, and when the state attacks religion it attacks them. "Embittered people do not make good workers," the bishops said.

"The struggle against belief is burdensome and hazardous, evoking reaction."

"Regardless of qualifications, skills and talents, leading positions in the professions were closed unless candidates professed atheism," they said.

The struggle has moved into culture and the mass media, with "sex, divorce, abortion, pornography, blasphemy" in the theater, films, television, radio and books, the bishops' statement said.

Threats, Interrogations Cited
"Actions against students, threats, blackmail, long and onerous interrogations" were designed to wear them away from academic chaplains and church lectures, the bishops added.

Children in summer camps, schools and state homes were told not to wear religious medals or crosses, and seminarians were called up for army service contrary to church-state understandings, the statement said.

The bishops' statement added that a state official had admitted in an interview that staggering of school vacations and changed syllabuses were aimed at weakening Catholic cohesion. Sunday excursions are part of a campaign to erode church attendance, they maintained.

"The church is under attack," their statement concluded. "Be sober, alert, vigilant."

Monument to Victims Of Stalin Is Sought

MOSCOW, Nov. 28 (Reuters)—A group of dissidents in Leningrad said today that they had written to Mayor Lev Zaitkov asking him to give them a site where they could set up a monument to the victims of Stalin's purges.

The eight dissidents said in their letter that the time was ripe for such a monument since it was exactly 20 years since Nikita S. Khrushchev, the late Soviet leader, denounced Stalin's actions in a speech at the 20th Communist Party Congress.

Mr. Khrushchev once announced that he would set up such a monument, but he never did so and his successors have sought to drop the topic of Stalin's purges. It is believed that millions died in the purges.

Israeli Aides Go to South Africa To Discuss Economic Relations

TEL AVIV, Nov. 28—Three senior Israeli officials flew to South Africa today for discussions on economic relations between the countries.

The three, Dov Kanterowitz, Controller of Foreign Exchange, Avigdor Bartel, Director of the Investment Authority, and Amos Mar-Haim, Director of the Investment Center, will reportedly concern themselves more with trade than investment.

The mission follows visits here in September by two South African trade delegations whose hosts were the Israel-South Africa Chamber of Commerce. Those visits followed one earlier in the year by Prime Minister John Vorster, who came on a religious pilgrimage but conferred with Government leaders.

Where should your aging mother live?

Alone? With you? In a nursing home? Or a surprising alternative.

Many doctors have referred their patients to an extraordinary residence—where senior men and women live on their own, but with someone on duty 24 hours every day.

It's an agonizing decision...when your mother needs care, you need your privacy, yet you can't bear to see her living in a nursing home.

But those were your alternatives. Until now.

An extraordinary retirement residence has just opened in Yorktown Heights, N.Y. Already over sixty men and women are thriving in a whole new life at The Country House in Westchester.

At The Country House, your mother (or father or parents) lives on her own—but there's always someone on duty, 24 hours every day. Every bath has a call button to get immediate assistance.

There is genuine concern. Residents at The Country House never have to worry about receiving enough care.

And she can lead a full, independent life—take the bus to town for shopping, go to cards, garden or just sit by the fireplace and chat with neighbors.

There are no entry or membership fees at The Country House. A 24-hour special care, keeping, limousine service.

Choose sunny studio or double suites.

Telephone or write for the Country House brochure with blueprints and a guided tour.

Political Prisoners to Total Over 25,000

Nov. 28 (AP)—A report by Amnesty International today said that 250,000 people have been jailed for political reasons and that the secret service frequently used tortures.

Amnesty International, a human-rights organization based in London, said in the report that those jailed included theologians, artists, university students and Moslem and Kurdish dissidents. Mohammad Riza Pahlavi has said his Government is holding 3,000 political prisoners on charges related to terrorism, including bombings and other urban guerrillas.

The Amnesty International report also said that since the beginning of 1972, military tribunals have sentenced 100 political prisoners to death. It went on to say that the secret police used such tactics as flogging, electric shock, pulling out fingernails and toenails, rape and torture.

Amnesty International said that it requested the human-rights group to hear of the specific charges against prisoners only a short time before trial, and it is practically impossible to appeal a sentence.

Jordan's Prime Minister Announces a New Cabinet

Jordan, Nov. 28 (UPI)—Prime Minister Mudar Badran submitted the resignation of his four-month-old Government today and then immediately announced a new 19-man Cabinet, the Prime Minister said today.

He gave no official reason for the reshuffle last night in which 15 members were dismissed and 14 new members appointed. The portfolios of defense and foreign affairs, both of which are held by Mudar Badran, and of the interior did not change. But in a move that reflected the need to revive Jordan's economy, new ministers for finance and industry and agriculture were named.

Other ministers also were named to the departments of education, public works, transport, youth and culture and rural affairs.

South Africa Says 214 Rebels Killed in This Month

South Africa, Nov. 28 (Reuters)—South African forces have killed six rebels in the last two days, bringing the total for the month of Nov. 1 to 214, a security spokesman said today.

The highest figure claimed by South African forces for any month since the start of the rebellion began four years ago. The total for Nov. 1 was 144, listed last month.

The spokesman also said that a black African died when he was ambushed in the Bikitia area of South Africa. It was in this area that four officials of the Inter-Continental Ministry were killed in an ambush.

Other black civilians have been killed in additional incidents involving South African forces, the spokesman said.

Irish Economy Criticized

London, Nov. 29 (Reuters)—The economic situation in Ireland is critical and the Government will have to continue to raise incomes even after the recession ends, an international economist said today.

A report on Ireland by the International Labour Office for Economic Cooperation said, "The economic situation in Ireland has reached a critical stage. If present trends continue, it will be extremely difficult to take action without impairing long-term growth prospects."

The report said: "The Government's decision to raise the pay scale by 10% this year for a pay pause of a year would appear to be a prudent move. The expiration of such a pause, however, would need to be carefully managed to avoid a resumption of pay increases."

Deaths in Explosions in Northern Ireland

Northern Ireland, Nov. 28—Two people were killed today in two separate bombings in Northern Ireland.

One man was killed when he triggered a bomb in an alley in Londonderry. An official said the victims had given warning to evacuate an area. An anonymous caller said the bomb had been planted.

Another explosion, in the town of Carrington, killed a 16-year-old girl and injured a 15-year-old girl. The girls were at a dance at Lurgan, south of Carrington, when they saw a light on the ground and decided to investigate. The 15-year-old girl was killed when the bomb exploded.

Five Are Sentenced for Aiding Reds

Hong Kong, Nov. 28—A military court today sentenced eight Taiwanese to 15 years in prison for helping the Chinese Communist Government in the government's fight against the Communists.

The first publicized cases in Hong Kong of Communist elements have been since 1970 and they have been helping here over the years.

Courts said the eight were sentenced to 15 years. Included were six businessmen who had been jailed in Hong Kong for allegedly helping the Communist Government and a legislator who was said to have visited the Communist Government.

Communist Leaders Are Arrested in Spain While Distributing Party Membership Cards

MADRID, Nov. 23 (Reuters) — Two members of the Spanish Communist executive committee were arrested while handing out party membership cards and detained for several days, sources said.

Sindir Sánchez Montero and Esteban Pardo were arrested by military Civil Guards in a bar in the suburb of Torrejón de Ardoz while handing party cards to workers of a truck manufacturing company. They were taken to central police headquarters and then released, the sources said.

They did not know if a third man reported detained at the same time, identified as Angel Fernández Lupión, was also a Communist Party member and if he too was set free.

A spokesman for Spain's main Socialist Party said two of its members had been detained by the police today in a northern Madrid suburb while putting up posters advertising the party's first legal congress since the civil war.

The spokesman also said that the delegate to the congress from the Canary Island of Lanzarote was detained yesterday after party literature had been found in his suitcase at an airport in the Canaries.

More than 30 Communists have been arrested in the Madrid area since last Monday when the party began a campaign of open acts designed to establish it publicly after almost 40 years of clandestine life.

Although the party is still illegal, the authorities have not been restraining it as much as they did under Franco.

Mr. Sánchez Montero, 60 years old, has spent 15 years in prison for his political activities. He was freed earlier this year under a royal amnesty after being held for several months on charges of illegal association.

In the Galician town of El Ferrol, Franco's birthplace, the police detained about 20 people today after 500 demonstrated in favor of voter abstention in the referendum called for Dec. 15 to ratify the Government's wide-ranging political reform program.

Earlier, the police arrested two workers selling copies of the organ of the Galician Communist Party, which carried an article urging abstention, Galician sources said.

The arrests came as informed sources said Prime Minister Adolfo Suárez would hold talks this week with left-wing opposition leaders to dissuade them from boycotting the referendum.

The Christian Democratic leader, Joaquín Ruiz Giménez, and other opposition leaders met here last night and set tough conditions for negotiations with the Government on the referendum and general elections next year.

They demanded legal status for all political parties, including the Communists, full civic rights, government neutrality in the campaign, an equal share of media coverage and dissolution of the National Movement, the only party allowed by Franco.

Thailand's 'Village Scouts' Prove To Be Too Zealous for Leaders

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN
Special to The New York Times

BANGKOK, Thailand, Nov. 28—The village Scout movement, begun about five years ago to help border policemen hunt for Communist insurgents, has grown so fervid that it has apparently alarmed its leaders. They have decided to call a halt to recruiting and training next month to reassess their policies and aims.

"Instead of a storm of patriotism," a troop leader said, "we may have created a firestorm."

The Village Scouts, with more than 1.5 million members throughout Thailand, are officially a Boy Scout movement. They recite the traditional scout pledge and on occasion raise three fingers to their foreheads in a recognizable Boy Scout salute, but there the resemblance ends.

While troop leaders train their young charges to tie knots and be helpful to the aged, colonels in the elite commando regiments known as the border patrol police instruct Village Scouts, ranging from 15-year-olds to the aged, in bivouacs and military maneuvers, and detectives of the Internal Security Operations Command lecture them on the menaces of Communism and the need for internal vigilance.

Joined in Attack on University

On Oct. 6, Village Scouts were in the forefront of the attack on Thammasat University here that preceded by a few hours the military coup that ended three years of civilian rule. Since then there has been a rush to join up. Reportedly, it has been more and more difficult to hold down the zeal of the scouts, who wear distinctive red bandanas.

Some scouts have been known to jump from cars and order fellow drivers to make way for them, while others have been known to denounce individuals as Communists or form vigilante groups and raid villages that they believe to be Communist sanctuaries.

The popularity of the movement in these times of division, military rule and rumors of Communist threats seems to spring from some deep need to belong to something and to express this desire forcefully. There has never been anything that most Thais would rather be identified with than the concept of king and country.

"It all works automatically," a troop leader said. "Once we get trained, we are united. So it is very difficult for other types of ideas to come in. We stress love of our king, of our country and religion."

"Oh, there's no political ideology. We do not mention Communism." He paused and then added, "but it works automatically."

Reporting Through Channels

He made it clear that for the scouts, any suspicious activity is to be reported immediately to the troop leader, who, in turn, reports it to the central district command. The information then gets to the police, in a strictly military chain-of-command structure.

"Our goal ultimately is to have one scout in every family in Thailand," the troop leader said. "With 40 million people in Thailand and about eight million families, that would mean eight million members."

Two weeks ago 500 prospective members, from 15-year-old students in vocational schools to an 80-year-old great-grandmother, from unemployed peasants to titled wives of wealthy businessmen, went through the rigorous five-day training program in the courtyard of a Buddhist temple.

A stocky colonel of the border-patrol police was overseeing the exercise, which included construction of field kitchens, patriotic songs and chants, physical workouts and lectures on a variety of military and patriotic issues, including narcotics and population control.

Cooking, Campfire, Flag-Waving

The recruits cooked their own meals, slept in makeshift dormitories on army-style sling cots and on a Saturday night gathered around a campfire in the center of the temple court for the highlight of the week's activities.

Thai students receiving bandanas from instructors at a ceremony concluding the rigorous five-day Village Scout training program.

Thousands of full-fledged scouts joined with the recruits in flag-waving processions and other celebrations that went on until dawn. It was the only exception to the Bangkok's midnight-to-4:30 A.M. curfew in force since the coup.

The next day, in a lengthy ceremony punctuated by bows to a photograph of King Phumiphon Aduldet, who underwrites many of the expenses of the movement, the recruits received their bandanas.

"I want to do whatever I can for my country," said the great-grandmother,

Chern Voranuj, after she received her Village Scout bandana. "I will do as much as I can."

Quebec Family Licks of Fleeing Minority Status

BY HENRY GUNGER
Staff Writer of The New York Times

MONTREAL, Nov. 28—Ten days after the victory of the separatist Parti Québécois in the predominantly French-speaking province of Quebec, a Quebec-speaking businessman here visited Toronto to look for a house to move there with his wife and two children. The man, who asked to remain anonymous, appeared to reflect a widespread feeling in the large and economically depressed English-speaking minority in Quebec—about 14 percent of the population—that their days in this province are numbered.

"I don't feel we will ever be accepted here, not being English-speaking. Things will get to the point where I will not be forced out, but I will want to get out," the husband, 34 years old, said in an interview. "I don't feel we will ever be accepted here, not being English-speaking."

People who say they are not worried, well I just don't believe it," he said. "I know of two people who had been planning investments but are not doing it. Every investment is not doing it. Every investment is not doing it. Every investment is not doing it."

Home in a Montreal Suburb
The couple were interviewed in the house they bought "for a year after the 1973 elections. It is a middle-class suburb of Dollard-des-Ormeaux on the western part of the island. The English-speaking population is concentrated there.

The house, valued at $55,000, was bought for $22,000 from someone "who left after the separatist Parti Québécois received 30 percent of the seats in the assembly. This allowed René Lévesque, the party leader, to take office last Thursday.

The man expressed hope that the English-speaking minority would stay because "it is an enrichment to have the English here. He said the English would help their status as a minority in the English-speaking part of Canada." When a referendum was played on the radio and wife, neither found it "for sale" signs have gone up in the neighborhood "because you would determine you to be a speaker." But the wife said that in the past two weeks there had been listings at local real estate agencies of the problem of leaving Quebec like Toronto is that "we would have to pay $100,000 for a house."

Life Would Be 'Frightening'
The man works in the retail automobile business for $30,000 a year. His 30-year-old wife works in a women's boutique and makes $12,000 a year. They live like Montreal and Quebec, but they find the prospect of moving to a place like Florida "frightening experience."

Business prospects in Toronto after further investigation to see if as they seem, the couple hesitate. They are also giving thought to leaving Canada altogether for a place like Florida.

She said her husband began to think about leaving a year ago because of economic conditions and a business downturn, but "it took the last year to do something about it." He has friends and business associates who are advertising the real estate market as a bad business.

A quiet investigation into the possibilities of living elsewhere is being conducted in the English-speaking community. It is particularly true in the Jewish community, where, within a minority, of couples are members. Jews make up 10 percent of the English-speaking minority.

Les Juifs Sont Riches
The man's wife said a week ago that "there were about 100 Jews there and the No. 1 topic was, the Jews, would be the subject. Let's face it, the Jews do have money. There is a saying among the French: 'Les Juifs Sont Riches'—The Jews are rich."

One of the family interjected that it was a redistribution of wealth in Quebec in favor of the Jewish community, the Jews have what strength they have and health keeps them strong in the province.

"I don't have anything to say," the husband said. "But or two maybe they'll kick me and put some young radical in place. After all, the basic party is among the English-speaking people."

His wife said the election to French heads and has "arrogant." "If you used to speak English and speaking French now," he said that 60 percent of the people at the boutique were French. "That's O.K., but it makes me speak anything but French."

She added: "When you are at home in a language you are only a little French while you are in conversation. I said they expected a drop in the English in Quebec and even poorer prospects than ever. She had been talk of a possible referendum for the English in Quebec—this has given them a strong reason for seeing their future."

Israeli Chief Says Only Lebanese Should Control Southern Border

with Israel—not additional partial agreements.

Syria strongly opposed Egypt's signing of two limited troop-withdrawal agreements with Israel in 1974. Until the Riyadh reconciliation, Cairo and Damascus took sharply conflicting positions on virtually all Middle East questions.

Saudi Arabia's willingness to use its political and, more important, its financial resources to bring about the inter-Arab agreement is of key importance to Israel. It opens the possibility of an effective moderating influence on future Arab-Israeli talks.

Conspicuous Absences at Riyadh

Israeli sources noted that neither Iraq nor Libya, the two most radical Arab countries, in the Israeli view, took part in the Riyadh meeting. This was considered further circumstantial confirmation of reports from third parties that Syria had agreed to the Egyptian approach on negotiations with Israel.

The new Saudi role has also emerged in North Africa, where Prince Fahd, a major figure in the Government of King Khalid, has been traveling between Morocco and Algeria in an effort to compose their differences over the Western Sahara.

Some Western European leaders at the Socialist conference here in Geneva, have been among the recent high-level visitors to Riyadh. They came back with reports that Khalid had brought about a change of atmosphere in his country.

The Europeans said they were impressed by the emergence of younger, modern-minded officials looking for solutions to substantive problems rather than theoretical resonance. The tone of "fanaticism," even about the future of Jerusalem, was said to have abated considerably.

These reports have reached the Israelis, who find grounds for encouragement that Saudi Arabia might now be willing to provide funds that could enable both Egypt and Syria to cope with their tremendous economic problems. In such a climate, Israeli officials feel, these neighboring Arab leaders would become much more interested in a settlement with Israel, to give priority to their home fronts.

The Israeli view remains wary, however. The current estimate is that Egypt is still not seeking a complete peace agreement but only an accord on "non-belligerence" that would fall well short of a permanent settlement.

The Israeli officials continue to believe that their Arab opponents will not be ready for peace until they are convinced that there can be no solution through another war however long delayed. Nonetheless, the Israeli interest in returning to the negotiating table in the near future was stressed more strongly than had been the case for a long time.

Allon Urges a Lebanese Force

Special to The New York Times

TEL AVIV, Nov. 28—Foreign Minister Yigal Allon called upon President Elias Sarkis of Lebanon today to set up a Lebanese national force to police the sensitive area of Lebanon that borders on Israel.

According to an official summary of a secret Cabinet meeting in Jerusalem, Mr. Allon said that southern Lebanon must be policed by units under Lebanese command and subject to the President and the Beirut Government.

The Israelis maintain that they would feel threatened if Syrian formations of the Arab peacekeeping force came south. Defense Minister Shimon Peres said that any such Syrian approach would "increase tensions and create new hazards," according to the report of the Cabinet meeting.

Last Issue for Israeli Daily

TEL AVIV, Nov. 28 (Reuters)—The Israeli newspaper Hayom Hahazeh, started three months ago by former Defense Minister Moshe Dayan, published its final issue today as a daily. It is to appear at a later date as a weekly. In a brief farewell editorial, the management expressed regret at the change.

Angolan Railroad Is Ready to Carry Neighbors' Freight, but Zaire Balks at Using It

LOBITO, Angola, Nov. 28 (UPI)—Before the Angolan civil war, the Benguela Railway was the economic lifeline of the rich copper belt in Zaire and Zambia.

The Angolan Government, its economy in tatters, desperately needs the $30 million in revenue that the railway once earned.

But the Benguela Railway remains a casualty of the politics spawned by the war, and no one knows when it can resume its former role.

The railway tracks that were destroyed during the war have been rebuilt, the dynamited bridges have been rebuilt and the railway once again can operate all the way from the port of Lobito to the Zaire border, 508 miles away.

Zaire Balks at Agreement

But Zaire so far refuses to sign an agreement with the Marxist Government in Angola to allow its copper, manganese and zinc to be shipped on the Benguela Railway.

Zaire supported the National Front for the Liberation of Angola in the civil war and remains cool to the Marxist regime that took power when Portugal granted independence to Angola in November, 1975.

As long as Zaire holds out, Zambia is prevented from using the railway, too, since its shipments have to pass through Zairian territory to reach it.

"We have an agreement with Zambia," said Luis Lamas de Oliveira, director general of the Benguela Railway. "Now everything depends on a political decision by Zaire."

Mr. Oliveira said the guerrilla forces of the National Liberation Front and National Front for the Total Independence of Angola that had harassed the rail line no longer was a significant problem.

Soldiers Ride the Trains

"We still have some problems because they sometimes cut the line," he said. But he said troops now rode the trains and any damage to lines was quickly repaired.

"The trains themselves have never been attacked," he said. The rail line ceased to function in the summer of 1975 when guerrillas blew up two of its seven large bridges. Mr. Oliveira said the line had been back in operation to the border at Dilolo since May, carrying goods within Angola. Western and African diplomats in Luanda confirmed his statement.

Mr. Oliveira said Zaire now shipped its minerals by a more expensive route through Zambia, Rhodesia and South Africa, and Zambia is now using a Chinese-built railway through Tanzania to the Indian Oceans port of Dar es Salaam.

"Our greatest problem today is a human problem," said Mr. Oliveira, who has been 28 years with the railway. He said 1,300 Portuguese railroad technicians and other workers fled the country when Angola was given its independence.

A few have returned, he said, and the railway has stepped up its training of Angolans for technical jobs. No foreign technicians have been brought in, he said.

The railway remains in private, mainly British, ownership and Mr. Oliveira said the Government recently adopted decrees to allow it to continue in this way.

Barney's Huddersfield Super 100's, the purest wool in the world. The only pure wool identified by a world-wide mark.

حكايا من الماضي

Wear the world's rarest sheep.

On ten farms in Australia, and nowhere else in the world, wool growers raise a breed of sheep whose fleece is of a gossamer fineness unequaled by any other.

The breed is called the merino herd. It is so rare that in a good year, perhaps 100 bales of its wool are shipped out.

It is so fine that when spun, a single pound of yarn unravels to 31 and 1/2 miles.

Huddersfield, England, a place singularly responsible for producing the finest woolens, is where the wool is spun and woven. And the resulting cloth is identified as Lumb's Huddersfield Super 100's, the 100's referring to the incredibly high number of threads per inch.

If there is a craftsman whose talents are on a par with the absolute luxury of this rare cloth, it is Chester Barrie of England. It's no coincidence that Chester Barrie is located in the same town that produces the Rolls Royce.

In fact, Chester Barrie is virtually a company without machinery: only hand-tailoring can ensure a suit that is so perfect in every detail.

A limited number of these exquisite suits is now available in this country. And the only place to find them is Barney's Oak Room.

It would be difficult to imagine a suit or coat more beautiful than one which embodies the luxury of the finest wool in the world, in combination with the magnificent craftsmanship and tailoring of Chester Barrie.

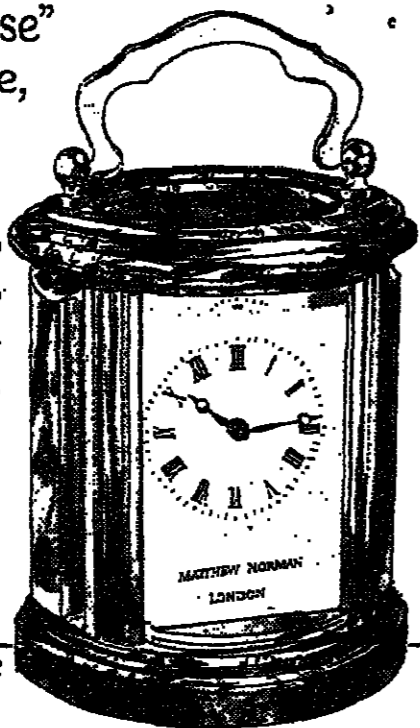

Even more difficult to imagine is the feeling of wearing one. We invite you to come in and do just that.

CONNECTICUT OFFICIAL BALKS ON REILLY INQUIRY

HARTFORD, Nov. 28 (AP) — Connecticut's Chief State's Attorney says there is no need to appoint a special prosecutor for a new investigation into the death of Barbara Gibbons and the prosecution of her son, Peter Reilly.

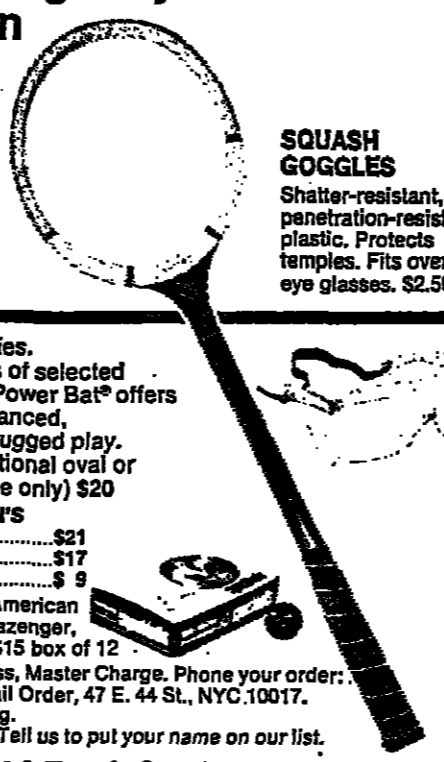

On Friday, Gov. Ella T. Grasso ordered the state police to reopen the investigation into the death. She also asked the Chief State's Attorney, Joseph Gornley, to investigate the prosecution of Mr. Reilly. Mr. Reilly's attorney, T.F. Gilroy, Daly, said yesterday that Mr. Gornley had "prejudged the case and his office and staff should be disqualified" from handling a new investigation.

But Mr. Gornley said of the suggestion for a special prosecutor, "I think at this point it is just unnecessary." Mr. Reilly was convicted in the slaying of his mother in 1973. Last week he was cleared of a manslaughter charge after the prosecution made public evidence it had not disclosed for three years. The evidence indicated Mr. Reilly was miles away from his mother's Falls Village cottage at the time of the slaying.

No explanation was given for why the statements had not been released earlier.

"How would you like to retire on $949,036.43?"

—Joe DiMaggio

If you're self-employed, The Bowery can show how you could build up a whopping nest egg for the future—and take a tax deduction* of up to $7500 every year.

Are you a physician, dentist, lawyer, accountant, salesman, writer, operator of an unincorporated business or member of a partnership?

The Bowery can help you salt away nearly a million dollars by the time you retire. Here's how:

December 31 deadline

The Bowery will set up a tax-favored* retirement plan. We serve as trustee and depository for your Retirement Account.

You are allowed to put 15% of your earned income, up to a maximum of $7500 a year, into your account. This money is tax deductible* on your 1976 return.

Tax is deferred until retirement or age 70½, when you will probably be in a lower tax bracket.

You may continue to make contributions to your account until your 1976 income tax is due—if you start your plan by December 31.

How the money adds up

When you make a contribution to your Retirement Account you can get our highest rate—7.75% a year. The annual yield is 8.17% with daily compounding. This is guaranteed on 6-7 year accounts of $1000 or more.

Based on our current 6-7 year rate, annual contributions of $7500 would give you $949,036.43 after 30 years. Future rates may be higher or lower than those presently available.

Permitted premature withdrawals are subject to substantial penalties.

Note: If you supplement regular income with self-employed work, you can also set money aside. See The Bowery for details.

Prefer to start an Individual Retirement Account?

A Bowery I.R.A. plan permits you to save up to $1500 a year (tax deductible). Amounts contributed together with interest earned accumulate tax free until you retire.

Call The Bowery's Retirement Plan Dept. at (212) 953-8334 for details or mail the coupon below.

Plan to Relocate Mental-Health Unit Hotel Is Assailed

By RICHARD J. MEISLEN
Manhattan City Councilman charged that a plan to move a socialization center for former mental patients into the first floor of the Brewster Hotel on the West Side was "part of a plot to convert the hotel into a government-owned facility."

residents of the area in front of the hotel, at 21 West 86th Street.
For about one and a half hours, the protesters picketed and listened to speeches by their neighbors and by leaders of community organizations, most of whom were highly critical of the proposed relocation of Bridge Inc., an organization that helps former mental patients adapt to society, in their neighborhood.

'Taking Advantage'
Mr. Stern's statement broadened a controversy that has focused largely on the effect that the proposed relocation could have on the security of the neighborhood. The relocation has been the subject of bitter debate in recent meetings of Community Planning Board 7, which voted last week to recommend that the move be delayed until "all feasible alternatives have been explored."

"The Bridge is a good facility," Mr. Stern said, "and we've got to find a new location for it. But the Brewster is not the right place. It is taking advantage of the Bridge for its own purposes."
Those purposes, he speculated, were the conversion of the building into a residence for people eligible for government assistance. An attempt was made two years ago to convert the hotel into a home for the elderly, but that attempt failed.
"No hotel owner would rent the first floor of his building to a mental-health facility if he wanted to attract paying residential tenants," Mr. Stern said.
Joseph Handler, one of the lessees of the Brewster, termed Mr. Stern's charges "absolutely untrue."

"Why should I get into a government program?" Mr. Handler asked. "I need the headache? I don't want to have to deal with the city."
He dismissed, with a wave of his hand, community fears over security.
"These people are not drug addicts, they are not alcoholics, they need help," Mr. Handler said. "This program is beautiful. They've never had an accident in all the time at their old place. There will be no security problem here."
City and State Aid
The Bridge, which is financed 80 percent by city and state funds, is situated on the third floor of the Loew's Theater at 83d Street and Broadway. Its lease, which provides for a token rent of $220 a month for 4,000 square feet, expires tomorrow. The organization has signed a lease with the Brewster for 8,000 square feet at a rent of $2,000 a month.

Outside the hotel, residents of the neighborhood marched in a circle, carrying signs that denounced the proposed move and that criticized Dr. June J. Christmas, the city's Mental Health Commissioner, for her public support of it. They chanted loudly, "Bridge moves in, we go to war."
At the perimeter of the crowd, a handful of members of the Bridge stood sullenly.
"We're a good organization, we've done great things for people," said William Nastuk, one of the members. "I feel like I've come a long way."
"We don't bother anybody. We just need what we've got in the Bridge," said Ronnie Powers, another member. "It's very hard finding a place. We've been looking for a long, long time."

SOME HOSPITALS SET MALPRACTICE FUNDS

coverage for the hospital. In 1975, in basic coverage and $42,000 for the hospital paid $191,000 for $600,000 $10 million in supplemental coverage, or a total of $233,000 in premiums for $10.6 million in coverage.

In 1976, the hospital was quoted new rates of $850,000 for the standard $600,000 so that the premium exceeded the coverage, and $1.5 million for the $10 million supplemental coverage, or a total of $2.35 million for the same protection it had the year before.

"We felt it was untenable," Mr. Kroncke said. "We felt with our record, self-insurance would be best for children's."

In May 1976, the hospital paid $150,000 in a suit, but other than small out-of-court settlements, it has had no malpractice problem, Mr. Kroncke said.

The hospital now puts $100,000 each month into a fund that is invested and will serve as the reserve to cover future claims.

If a settlement should exceed the amount in the reserve, the hospital will have the same recourse it would have had if a claim had exceeded conventional insurance coverage: It can borrow to pay or it can liquidate assets and close its doors, Mr. Kroncke said.

In the last decade the question of malpractice insurance, both for doctors and for hospitals, has grown increasingly difficult.

The number of suits has proliferated, producing sharp rises in insurance premiums. Some physicians' groups have been unable to find a company to underwrite coverage, even at astronomical prices.

Experts in the field say that part of the problem has been the structure of malpractice insurance coverage.

When a suit is filed, the insurance company usually sets aside for future settlement the amount the plaintiff requests.

The practice ties up huge amounts of cash. And since the plaintiff may settle out of court or a jury may not award the amount requested, the cash is not always spent. But the settlement process can take years.

As of 1974, the American Hospital Association estimated that about 3 1/2 percent of the cost of hospital operations went to pay for malpractice insurance. The figure has increased since, although the association has not completed its most recent study of the situation.

The association is also conducting a survey to see how many hospitals are "going bare," according to David Drake, its director of policy development. And it is looking into the steps that hospitals take to lower their susceptibility to malpractice suits, once they have assumed the total risk.

That question was brought to the attention of the association by David H. Hitt, director of the 1,300-bed Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas. Mr. Hitt is a board member of the association and serves on national and state malpractice insurance study commissions. He is among the administrators who have "gone bare" at least for part of the insurance coverage, and he was also influential in changing the Medicare rule.

Until last year, the hospital paid $90,000 for its basic coverage, but this year it was asked to pay $900,000.

Since the hospital has paid out a total of $74,000 in malpractice claims and has another $106,000 outstanding in unsettled suits, the new price tag seemed out of line. The hospital has contracted with an insurance company to take the $900,000 and administer Baylor's own malpractice insurance plan.

With the savings, Mr. Hitt said, the hospital has invested in patient-relations programs and accident-prevention programs for its professional staff.

"In the face of callous treatment by the hospital, it will be much more difficult to deal with a patient in a settlement than if they know that you are concerned about their welfare," he said.

"It is expensive to do these things, and you have to get the money from some place. One way to get it is through the savings realized through self-insurance."

Merit Cigarette Sets New Taste Standard.

'Enriched Flavor'™ breakthrough brings unprecedented taste to low tar smoking.

Today there's a way to get real taste from a cigarette without high tar.

That's the report on a new taste discovery called 'Enriched Flavor.' A way to pack flavor—extra flavor—into tobacco without the usual corresponding increase in tar.

The cigarette packed with 'Enriched Flavor' tobacco is remarkable new MERIT.

If you smoke, you'll be interested.

MERIT delivered more taste than five current leading low tar cigarettes having all the way up to 60% more tar.

Repeat: delivered more taste.

In similar tests against 11 mg. to 15 mg. menthol brands, MERIT MENTHOL was reported to deliver as much—or more—taste than the higher tar brands tested.

Carter Is to Inherit Executive Branch That Bears Stamp of G.O.P. Reign

fashion what Presidents Nixon and Ford did in the interim.

The Watergate scandal, which toppled one President and haunted the next, made the Republican record somewhat schizophrenic. Mr. Nixon absorbed power, Mr. Ford used it lightly. But six years of imperial Presidency and two of executive restraint worked in combination to alter the outlook, change the tone and, to some extent, restructure the shape of the executive branch.

White House Staff Grew

The White House staff, already aggrandized under President Johnson, grew substantially as Mr. Nixon centralized authority. The acknowledged size of the Presidential staff was 208 when Mr. Johnson departed, and 522 by the beginning of Mr. Ford's final year.

Toward the close of his election campaign, Mr. Ford criticized his predecessor for a "dictatorial" approach to governance. Nonetheless, Mr. Ford retained Mr. Nixon's White House instruments of that approach, including an Office of Congressional Relations that centralized communication or association with senators and representatives, an Office of Public Liaison that dealt directly with interest groups and an Office of Communications that leaped over the Washington press corps to sell White House views to editors and broadcasters across the country.

The Cabinet, occasionally a repository of leaders and innovators, grew moribund, its members largely anonymous. Mr. Nixon was intolerant of dissent at the department level; Mr. Ford, after seeking some Cabinet officers of character, gave them little room for creativity as he pursued a policy barring new Federal programs in most areas.

With some exaggeration, a senior Republican official once remarked recently that the only way for a Cabinet official other than Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to attract notice at the White House was to act independently, as Walter J. Hickel did at the Department of the Interior before Mr. Nixon dismissed him, or rashly, as Earl Butz did at the Department of Agriculture before Mr. Ford accepted his resignation.

The concentration of the foreign policy apparatus in Mr. Kissinger's office, first at the White House and later at the State Department, affected the rest of the national security establishment. Highly personalized diplomacy—Mr. Carter called it Mr. Kissinger's "Lone Ranger" style—gave foreign policy experts shrinking influence.

The Department of Defense, freed of the conduct of a war in Indochina, found that such institutions as the International Security Agency, once known as a "pocket State Department," had minimal impact. So the Pentagon turned inward, focusing on procurement and weapons development.

The net effect on a bureaucracy alternately stifled and ignored, then beset with public disdain growing out of disclosures of misconduct at the Central Intelligence Agency and the Federal Bureau of Investigation, was the demoralization of many career civil servants.

A Quadrupling of Retirements

A wave of early retirements hit the staff of the Treasury Department after former Secretary John B. Connally directed officials to issue analyses they considered misleading. In 1973, after Mr. Nixon's re-election, retirements across the bureaucracy quadrupled. Contrary to widespread presumption, overall employment in the executive branch declined 106,000 between 1968 and 1976.

In some regulatory agencies, theoretically independent of the White House, budget limitations imposed by Presidential agents curtailed activities. Under Mr. Nixon, the Federal Trade Commission ascended, for want of funds, a planned inquiry into hospital and medical practices.

Appointments of ideologues and corporate executives to regulatory agencies betted an existing orientation toward the governed industry rather than its consumers.

Except for the Federal Trade Commission, "it's been a slow slide downhill" of regulatory agencies, according to one congressional observer.

The social initiatives of President Johnson's Great Society were blunted first by Mr. Nixon and then by Mr. Ford. The Office of Economic Opportunity, the antipoverty agency that Mr. Johnson had endowed with visibility and authority by placing it in the White House, was systematically dismantled.

Ford Publicly Opposed Busing

President Nixon demanded the resignation of an outspoken member of the United States Civil Rights Commission, the Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, president of the University of Notre Dame. President Ford publicly opposed the court-ordered busing of students to achieve a racial balance in public schools.

Although civil rights officials in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare had cut off Federal funds to 200 public school systems in the late 1960's to compel compliance with desegregation orders, only one comparable directive has been issued since 1969.

Congress created the Occupational Safety and Health Administration six years ago to oversee the job conditions of 80 million workers. Mr. Ford attacked it as a classic example of undue Government meddling. Two-thirds of the $10 million budgeted by the agency to set health standards this year is being consumed in meeting a White House requirement that the cost to employers of each new standard be measured before the rule is implemented.

Panel for Spanish-Speaking Folded

Structural changes in the executive branch reflected, as much as anything, the passing interests of the White House. The White House Bureau of the Budget was transformed into the Office of Management and Budget but remained, by one insider's account, "more than a budget bureau and less than a management bureau."

A National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration panel, along with a Domestic and International Business Administration Cabinet Committee on Opportunities for Spanish-Speaking People, on the other hand, was allowed to expire.

Mr. Ford set up an Energy Resources Council and an Office of Drug Abuse Policy. The Republicans resisted, though, when Congressional Democrats insisted on creating an independent Consumer Products Safety Commission.

Mr. Nixon's intention to merge seven Cabinet departments into four was thwarted when Congress, reacting in 1973 to Watergate and to Mr. Nixon's refusal to spend funds Congress appropriated, refused to go along.

As it is, the most permanent legacy of the Nixon-Ford years is likely to be the creation of the Federal revenue-sharing program. Mr. Nixon persuaded Congress to establish the system, and Mr. Ford convinced Congress this year to continue it. Under the program, about $10 billion is being distributed, in lump sums with few strings attached, to states, counties and municipalities for community development, law enforcement and general government purposes.

Local Officials Protested

The probable continuation of the program is instructive as Mr. Carter prepares to take office. When Congress dallied this year about renewing it, hundreds of officials from communities across the country lobbied successfully for its renewal. The program advances the Republican objective of transferring to states and cities the powers that have been gradually assumed by Washington. At the same time, it has satisfied the desire of a number of Democrats at local levels for methods tailored to special, local circumstances for dealing with their problems. As a result many, if not all, liberal Democrats developed fresh notions about the efficiency and management of Federal programs.

The change in Democratic thinking, even though not yet definitive, is significant. Even as Presidents Nixon and Ford used the last eight years to try to limit the Federal presence in society, Democrats spent their years out of power reassessing the results of their activism in the 1960's and trying to devise methods for making more appropriate Federal contributions to society.

One symptom of the change was the creation by Congressional Democrats of new Budget Committees in the Senate and House. The committees have begun trying to determine priorities for use of the lesser amounts of money in recent Federal budgets.

A more vivid symptom may have been the Carter candidacy itself. Mr. Carter "practically ran for President as a Republican without the label," protested one of President Ford's assistants the other day. "He talked of reorganization, better management, fiscal integrity. Those are Republican trademarks."

If so, Mr. Carter was not alone in embracing them. At the Brookings Institution here, Henry Owen and Charles L. Schultz, who were senior officials of the Johnson Administration, concluded after long study that the Federal Government had come to be considered by the public as more of a problem than a problem-solver.

That attitude will diminish, Mr. Owen and Mr. Schultz wrote recently, only through efforts of national leaders who "distinguish more clearly between tasks the Government can and those it cannot accomplish," and who "make the Government and its policies more efficient in responding to problems that properly fall within its domain."

Authors' Point of View

In an introduction to a Brookings study entitled, "Setting National Priorities," Mr. Schulze and Mr. Owen wrote:

"Neither the view held in the 1950's that the United States should provide leadership in dealing with every world problem nor the currently fashionable view that the U.S. role should be retracted almost everywhere beyond its borders is much help in dealing with complex security and economic problems abroad. 'Neither the older hope that almost any problem could be solved by a piece of Federal legislation and some money nor the new skepticism that Government intervention inevitably makes things worse is accurate or useful.'"

"What emerges from all this," they continued, "is an implicit plea for discrimination, for a careful sorting out of the things the Government can reasonably do well from those it cannot, and for a fundamental improvement in some of the ways the Government traditionally goes about formulating domestic and foreign policy."

It is significant that both Mr. Schulze and Mr. Owen were among the consultants to Mr. Carter in his Presidential campaign.

Advantages Seen for Carter

But the notion exists, even beyond Mr. Carter's circle of advisers that he may arrive at the White House at a propitious time, a time when expectations for Government performance are reduced, when a disgraced Presidency was restored to at least a minimum level of respectability by Mr. Ford, and when the Democrats control both the legislative and executive branches.

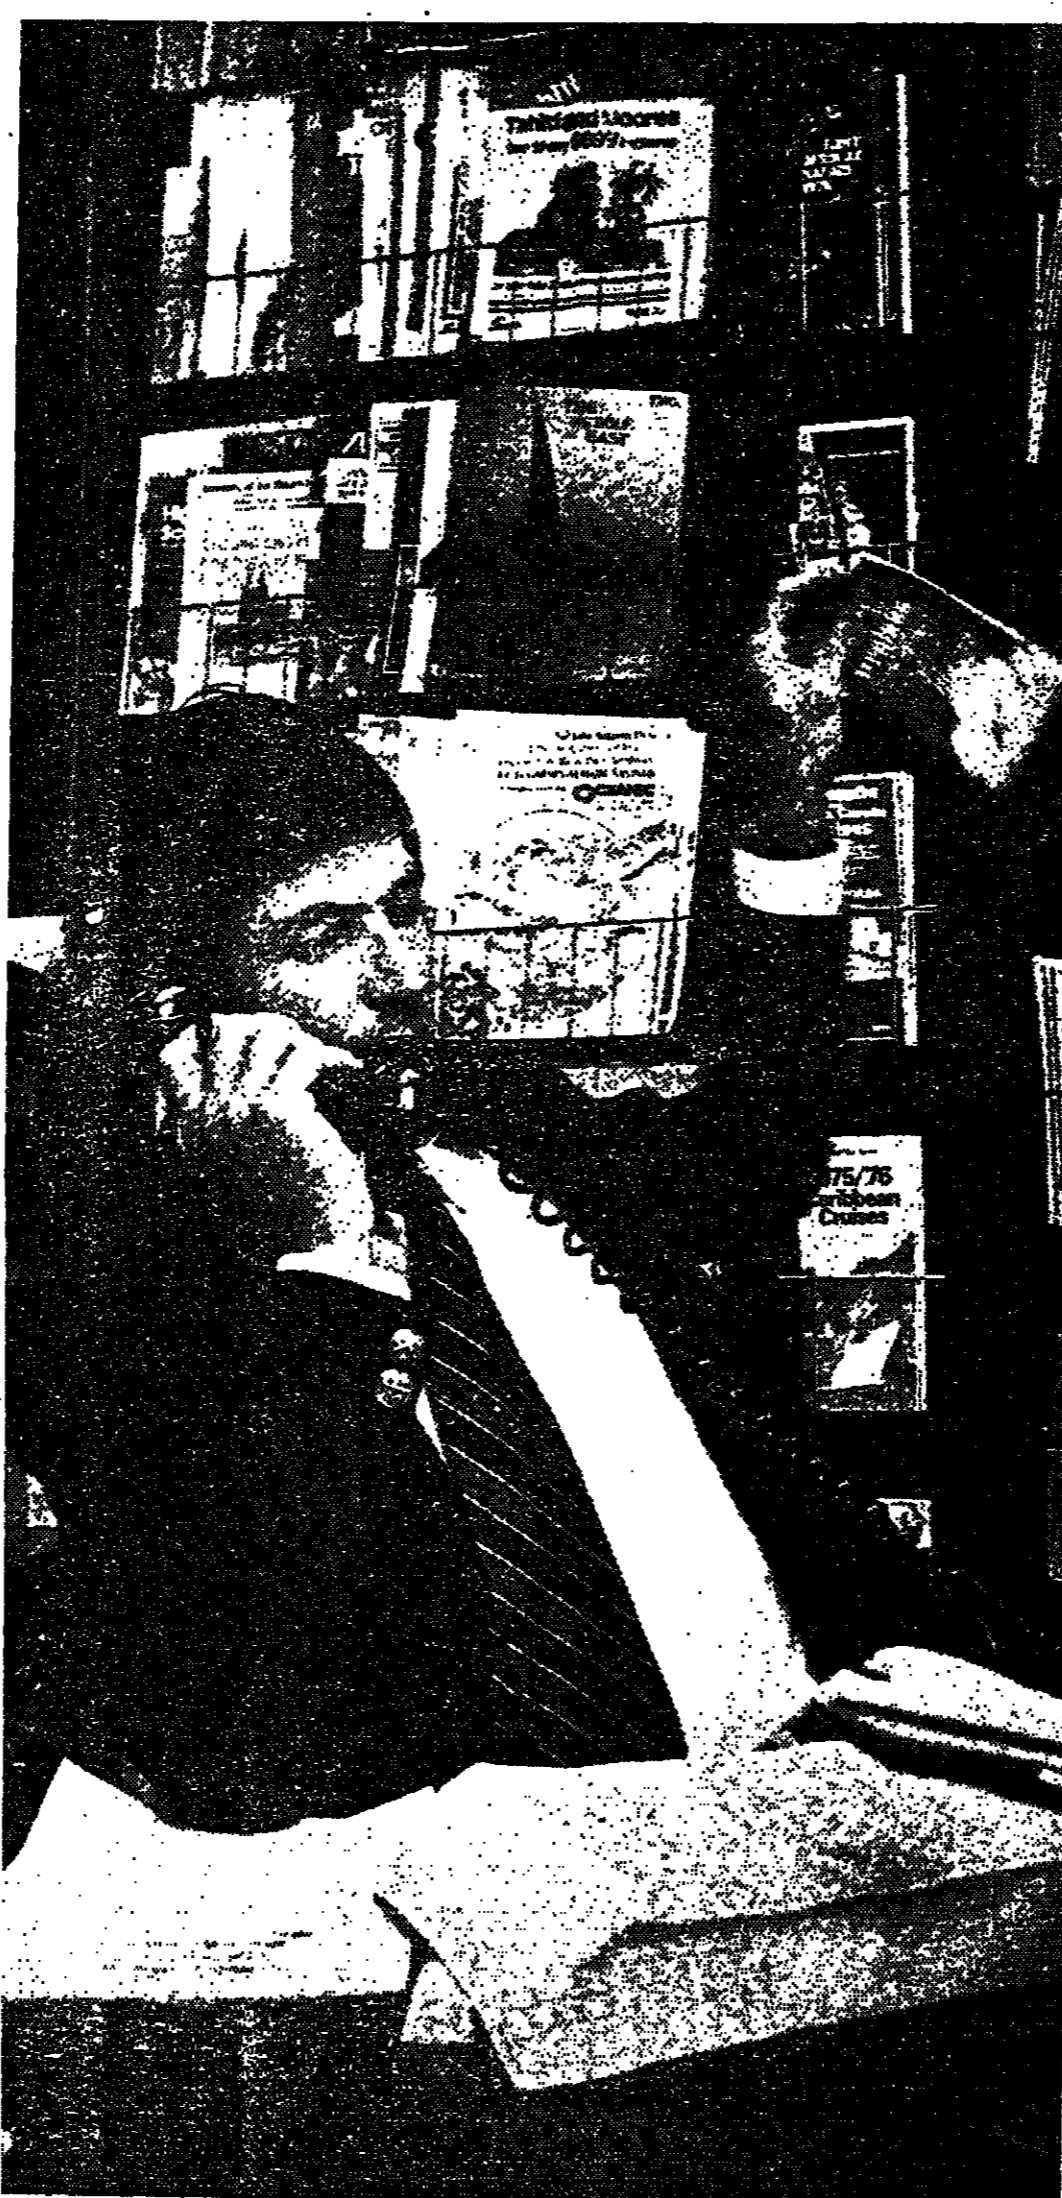

"The remarkable thing," said James E. Connor, the departing White House Cabinet secretary, "is how, after eight years, Washington is different but not terribly different." The changes made by the Republicans are not immutable and in Mr. Connor's view, the effect of Mr. Nixon's enlargement and Mr. Ford's deflation of the Presidency is to bring the institution back to more life-size proportions.

Yet the Presidency remains strong, even after having been racked by events of the last eight years, said Thomas E. Cronin, a Brandeis University professor of American politics who has studied and written on the Presidency. "We've come through this eight-year period with a redefinition of what strength means," Mr. Cronin said in a telephone interview. "We once felt that what was good for the President was good for the nation. Now it is up to the President to prove to us that what is good for the President is good for the nation."

"We once felt that a President knew a lot more than we did, that we should refer to him. We now feel he should report to the press and explain to the public."

"I think that's healthy," Mr. Cronin concluded. "A strong President has nothing to hide."

The day of the Million Dollar Retirement

with tax deductions up to $7,500 a year!

The Williamsburgh Savings Bank offers some of the best breaks in years: tax deductions as high as $7,500 a year...until you retire...top Williamsburgh interest—also tax-free...and a retirement fund started at age 35, that can actually top $1,000,000, when taken out over a ten-year period, starting at age 65.*

Self-employed never had it so good! Doctors, lawyers, accountants and corporate directors can now open a Williamsburgh Savings Bank Keogh retirement account, put in up to $7,500 a year—and both principal and interest are tax-deferred each year until they retire.

The Keogh-Plan is also good for a tailor, butcher, carpenter, plumber or other self-employed persons. You don't have to put in the maximum— even small deposits get top interest—but if you deposit $7,500 a year starting at age 35, with Williamsburgh interest your retirement fund will top the million-dollar mark.

approved by its board yesterday, also plans to ask Mr. Carter to create a Council of Urban Advisers, develop a comprehensive urban income strategy and seek early re-enactment of several Federal assistance programs that will expire next year.

The League of Cities, composed of mayors, councilmen and other city officials, welcomed 3,000 delegates to this 52d annual meeting, which will run through Wednesday.

Mr. Carter and Vice President-elect

Walter F. Mondale declined invitations to speak here, but Mr. Carter sent Al Stern, an adviser, to witness the proceedings, confer with city officials and report back to him, Mr. Tanzler said.

A public works program "provides the most logical outlet for immediate infusion of Federal antirecessionary resources," the league board said in its statement.

"The program," it said, "is completely in place and has already generated over $15 billion in public works applications from financially distressed state and local governments. If funded, these projects, scheduled to have labor on site within 90 days, would have an almost immediate effect on the severe and continuing employment problem in the construction industry."

Asked why the city officials had not asked for more than $3.5 billion, in view of the applications for nearly five times that much, Mr. Tanzler said, "We want to be realistic—I would say we wanted to give a figure within reason."

The directors said the President needed a Council of Urban Advisers to help him deal with urban policy, just as he has a Council of Economic Advisers for economic policy.

Related to Other Departments

"Urban policy, like economy policy, is not an area which can be managed by a single department," the statement said. "It includes housing, environment, transportation, economics and is related to virtually every activity of the Federal Government."

The city officials called on the next Congress to re-enact the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act, which created the Government's manpower program that is due to expire next year. They also asked that the community development program of block grants, due to expire next September, be extended and enlarged.

Phyllis Lamphere, a member of the city council in Seattle who is expected this week to become the first woman elected president of the league, said the cities needed an improved program to rehabilitate old and deteriorated housing.

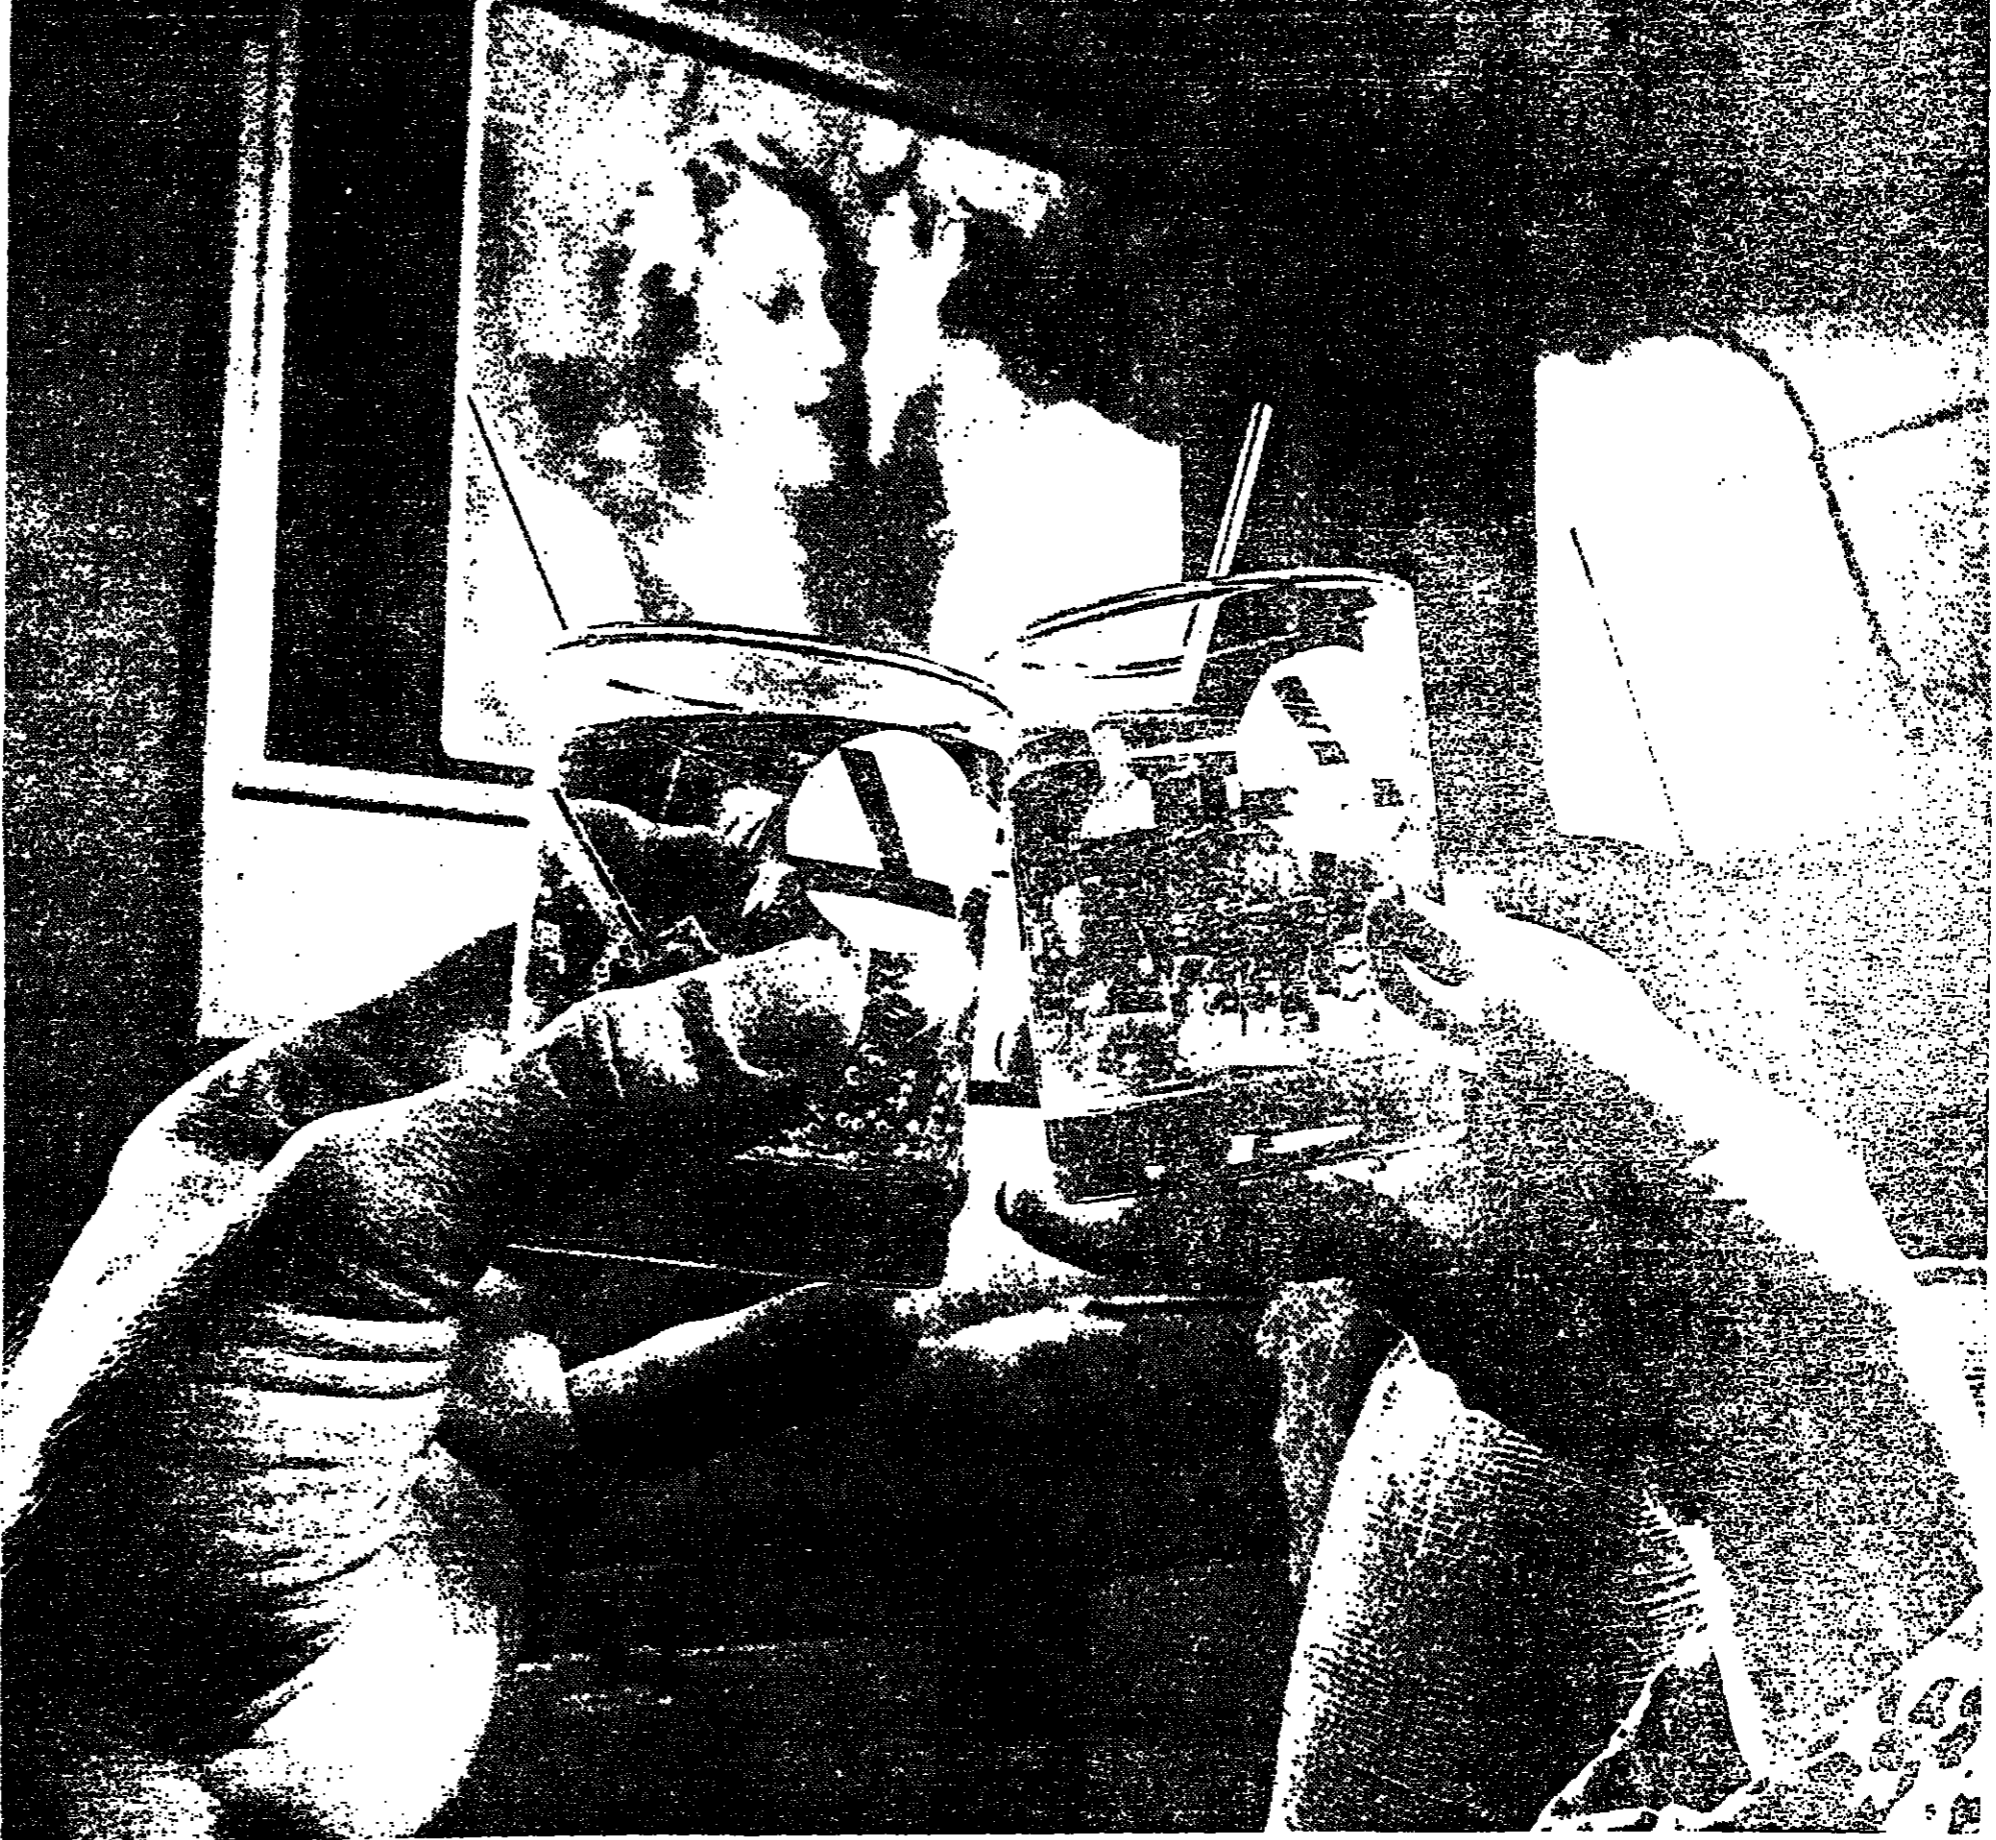

"We also need strong Federal policies against redlining of old neighborhoods," Mrs. Lamphere said.

The directors asked the incoming administration to press forward with basic reforms in the welfare system and renewed emphasis on enforcement of civil rights, including the right to equal employment and to enjoy equal municipal services.

In other areas they called for a national energy policy, a "national reassessment of crime and its causes, prevention and punishment," and increased support for urban mass transit.

NEW PROGRAM HELPS SUFFOLK CONSUMERS

Undercover Investigators Employed to Check on Cheating by Weight and Other Violations of Law

By IVER PETERSON
 HAUPPAUGE, L. I. — Suffolk County deli owners: watch out for those orders for a pound of macaroni. Bakers: weigh your cookies before you put them in the cookie tin, not afterward. Car dealers: get your facts straight on new-car service, especially when your customers are a young couple asking pointed questions about caring for the car after its bought.

Because your customers may not be customers — they may be undercover sleuths from the Suffolk County Department of Consumer Affairs, and they're watching you.

Sending out undercover customers to check on consumer fraud is just one of a dozen techniques that James J. Lack, Commissioner of Consumer Affairs for Suffolk County, uses to snare the short-weighters, the false promises, the hidden charges that cause most of the 17,000 consumer complaints that come into his office each year.

"We ask for macaroni salad because it's cheap and because with all the air in the holes of macaroni it's sometimes hard to pack a full pound into a one-pound container," Mr. Lack, 32 years old, said. "On a random basis, we find that the salad is short-weighted between 25 and 33 percent of the time."

With the cookies, Mr. Lack's investigators have found that in about the same number of cases, bakers weigh the cookies in the cookie tin.

And when complaints came in last year from the owners of new Toyotas asserting that their dealer had charged them for a first 1,000-mile oil change and lubrication job that the manufacturer did not recommend, he sent out a young couple posing as prospective customers. The dealers told the investigators that the extra service was routine, and Mr. Lack promptly subpoenaed the service records of the 924 Toyota buyers in 1975 to see if the added charges were widespread.

The dealers are now fighting the subpoena in court.

The Case of Lawnmower Repairs

Then there was the time Mr. Lack's office intentionally short-circuited the on-off switch of a lawnmower—a fault that would take five minutes and some friction tape to correct—and took it around to the lawnmower repairmen, saying it wouldn't start. One of the bills for the job ran over $60, the cheapest was $8, most took two weeks to be completed, and Mr. Lack's office is now preparing to ask the Suffolk County Legislature to require licenses for lawnmower repairmen.

Consumer protection in Suffolk County and in most other counties in the state has changed over the last decade, and Mr. Lack is an example of the kind of change that is taking place. Ten years ago there was hardly a county in the state with its own public champion of consumer rights; today, most have them, according to the State Consumer Protection Board.

The board's spokesman, Jack Markowitz, describes these county-consumer offices as "political necessities." "County governments must have them," Mr. Markowitz said. "Candidates run on consumer-protection platforms, and they couldn't survive politically without them."

Mr. Markowitz added that consumer problems, "like the price of utilities has become the No. 1 political issue—it's gone from being the price of turkey to questions of how the average worker is going to survive in the marketplace."

With the new emphasis on consumer issues has come a spate of new laws intended to protect buyers. These new laws, in turn, have changed the public consumer-protection offices from being the domain of kindly women handing out advice on how to spot stale fish to that of lawyers, like Mr. Lack, whose offices are often more akin to law-enforcement bureaus.

"That's what this is," Mr. Lack said the other day. "It's a law-enforcement agency—no ifs, ands or buts about it—and we're looking for people who rip off, cheat, take people to the cleaners, whatever cliché you want to use."

One Penalty: The "Sell-off"

In enforcing the law, Mr. Lack likes to make the punishment fit the crime, and one penalty he uses is the "sell-off." Such as the time a supermarket was caught with a sign over the bacon advertising meat at $1.39 a pound while the bacon packages were labeled $1.79—the amount that the customers ended up being charged at the checkout counter.

"Normally a consumer-fraud bureau would fine the company and the money would go to the county treasurer," Mr. Lack said. "But we got the store to agree to sell their bacon at cost—99 cents a pound—for two weeks instead." That way, he said with obvious satisfaction, the advantage goes back to the consumer who was bilked in the first place. Mr. Lack has used the same sell-off penalty in several other cases.

"It deprives the Suffolk County treasury of a few hundred bucks, but it provides direct restitution to the people who were victimized," he said. Besides the sell-off, and charging the offender for the cost of the investigation, Mr. Lack has forced false advertisers to run corrections. All of these penalties, he said, often end up costing the offender more than an ordinary fine anyway.

Most of the complaints that come into his office are about plumbing, electrical and home-improvement work, especially now that the housing market is sour in the suburbs and homeowners are investing in improvements to their present homes instead of moving to new ones. The county has enacted stringent licensing requirements for these kinds of work—Mr. Lack's office won't issue a license if there is an unsettled complaint against the company.

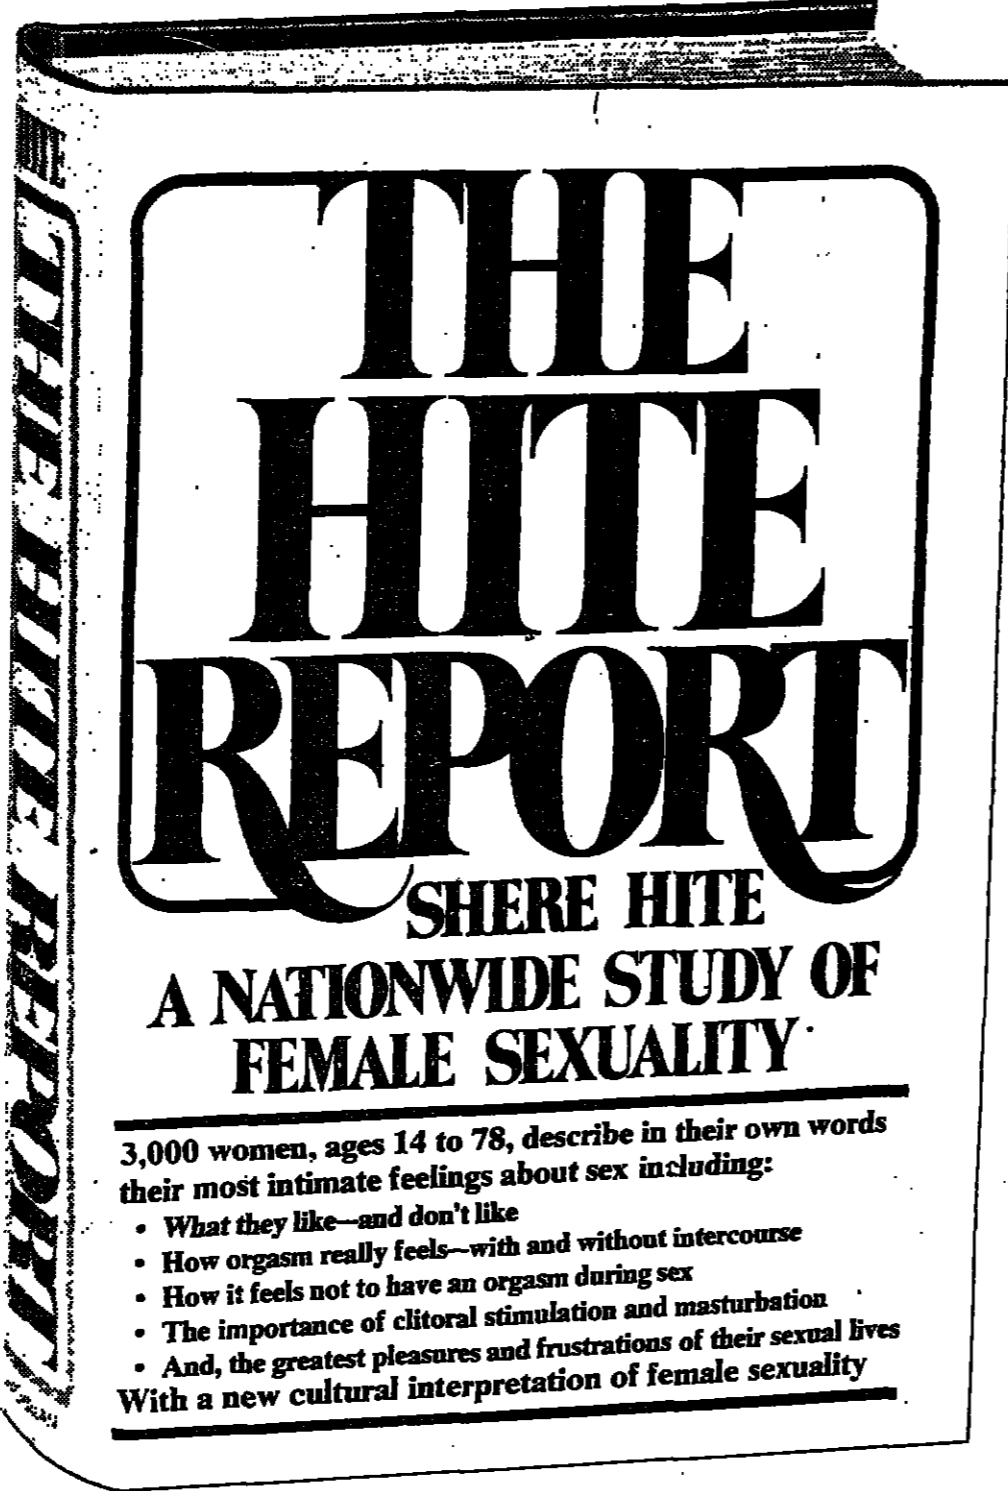

Enforcement of consumer laws such as these have, of course, landed Mr. Lack's office and others like his in court more than once. "Directly or indirectly, I guess we're in every major court in the state," he said. "With the builders over the ban on aluminum electrical wiring, with the phone company over the Yellow Pages, with the Toyota dealers over their service charges."

Along with the friends he has made since he opened the office in January 1974, Mr. Lack has also picked up a few critics, most of them on the other side of the consumer issue from him.

Nobody in this country writes better prose than Renata Adler's.

is Lillian Hellman, young again; Joan Didion with a tendency to giggle; Albert Camus on one of his sunny days." —John Leonard, Harper's Renata Adler is an exquisite craftsman. Her style is luminously exact, subtle in its rhythms... The book does have an emotional impact—a strong one... It should, I think, be read... with frequent pauses for re-reading." —Robert Towers, N.Y. Times Book Review

Don't Bury the Family

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT

HERE TO STAY. American Families in the Twentieth Century. By Mary Jo Bane. 195 pages. Illustrated with tables. Basic $11.50.

Occasionally we worry about who will look after the children — or if there will even be any children—in that inevitable future when the institution of the American family is finally interred. But that's all that remains to be settled, what with the increasing impermanence of things, what with declining births and rising divorces, what with the further recession into the past of the dear old days when Grandma and Uncle and Cousin all lived happily together under one roof, what, in short, with the death of the family. Only details remain to be mopped up.

Right? No, wrong, at least according to Mary Jo Bane, associate director of the Center for Research on Women and assistant professor of education at Wellesley College. According to Professor Bane, the declining birth rate reflects the decreasing size of individual families, not an absolute decision by the population to give up having children. Although divorce rates have risen dramatically, most people remarry after divorcing, those who do not, tend to keep their children with them more than people used to, and, given the increase of life expectancy, families today are less often "disrupted" by the loss of a parent than they were a century ago.

Just a Myth

What's more, Professor Bane argues, "Recent historical studies show the myth of the extended family household to be just that—a myth. The nuclear family, consisting of parents living with their own children and no other adults, has been the predominant family form in America since the earliest period on which historians have data." In sum, "The facts—as opposed to the myths—about marriage, child rearing, and family ties in the United States today provide convincing evidence that family commitments are likely to persist in our society. Family ties, it seems clear, are not archaic remnants of a disappearing traditionalism, but persisting manifestations of human needs for stability, continuity, and unconditional affection." The American family, as the title of her book declares, is "Here to Stay."

Now all this may be reassuring to those of us who happen to enjoy family life and appalling to those who see the family as an obstacle to progress in equality of the sexes and its attendant benefits. But Professor Bane didn't write "Here to Stay" to appall or reassure. She recognizes that we in America are now committed to certain public values that appear to be at odds with the family's privacy—the most important of these public values being sexual equality, to which she herself is clearly a committed devotee, as well as "equality of opportunity for children," by which she means the right of minors to be protected by adults and the right of children to economic sufficiency. (She is not splitting hairs here; she simply has several practical points in mind.)

If the persistence of the family is not taken into account, she goes on to argue, the way we act on our commitment to these public values could prove destructive. Thus, her main purpose in writing "Here to Stay" is not so much to prove that the family is alive and well, but instead to propose ways of implementing these public values in such a way as to acknowledge the family's continued viability. As she concludes, following a detailed examination of such issues as mandatory day care for all (which she opposes), the Equal Rights Amendment (which she favors), and Aid to Families with Dependent Children (which she believes should be handled in the same way as unemployment compensation and Social Security):

"The tensions between family privacy and other values are to some extent resolvable by a public stance that emphasizes the rights of individuals and leaves family roles to be worked out privately. For example, the most workable approach to sexual equality is probably to enforce the political and economic rights of women, and to rely on families to work through the power shifts and changing division of labor that political and economic equality imply. The protection of children, a more complicated task because of children's inherent dependency, may be partially dealt with by emphasizing the individual rights of children and designing mechanisms for articulating them.

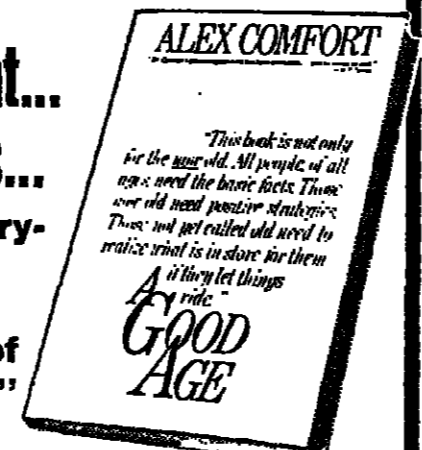

'Lifetime Insurance'

"Yet another kind of tension, between family privacy and equal opportunities for children, may also be resolvable within an individualistic framework. 'Lifetime insurance'—which would make individuals responsible not only for their old age but also for their own childhood care—is a mechanism for equalizing opportunity with minimal intrusion in family privacy. An insurance scheme to provide benefits to single-parent families would also try to reconcile aid to children and non-interference in adult lives by emphasizing the notion of marital disruption as an insurable risk."

As you can see, Professor Bane is a sober writer who throws words and ideas around as if she were building Stonehenge. But she brings to her study the authority she earned as one of the principal co-authors, along with Christopher Jencks, of the landmark study "Inequality: A Reassessment of the Effect of Family and Schooling in America." And "Here to Stay" packs a powerful punch because its author has stuck to quantitative data, which, while they "allow for little psychological interpretation of the sort that has recently become fashionable," nevertheless have the advantage of being reasonably straightforward and trustworthy. "One hopes that it will be read widely and taken with the utmost seriousness."

"Vivid and forthright... A book for all ages... Has information on everything from alcohol to wrinkles, touches virtually every aspect of aging one can imagine."

—ROBERT KIRSCH, Los Angeles Times

Grandma Moses didn't start painting until she was 78, Frank Lloyd Wright began the most prolific part of his career at the age of 69, and Dame Edith Evans appeared in her first film at age 60. These people and thousands of others have proven that older people can be as active and accomplished as anyone else. If you're an older person, read A GOOD AGE and learn how you can enrich your life. But, as Dr. Comfort says, "This book is not only for the now old. All people, of all ages, need the basic facts. Those now old need positive strategies. Those not yet called old need to realize what is in store for them if they let things ride."

Comfort is angry, and he offers a lot of practical advice about how to resist destructive social pressures, explodes many myths and explains the biology of aging in clear, elegant and pungent language." —Washington Post

"A GOOD AGE has the same size, feel and illustrated mini-encyclopedia format as the author's last two manuals, The Joy of Sex and More Joy of Sex... Clearly intent on consciousness raising among the elderly, Comfort urges those over 65 to take no guff about their age... All the elderly really need, says Comfort, is a better shake from society—and more bloody-mindedness." —Time Magazine

"A GOOD AGE is at once poetic, passionate, gently ironic, humane—and lucid, practical, tough-minded and detailed... It is a gentle but glorious manifesto, and it is full of life." —N.Y. Times Book Review

Give the #1 gift book—a blueprint of adult life.

"Each decade is presented as unique and special, exciting and full of possibilities. Even the periods of painful crises are viewed as merely the opportunity for creative change. Gail Sheehy gives us something to look forward to. That feeling of acceptance and enthusiasm is a special gift. Every seven years or so, I intend to read this book. So should you." —Sharon Curtin, Newsday

"Human maturation does not cease, as I had imagined at 21, because our lives keep changing. Needs change. Relationships change, values are tested and strengthened or discarded. We gain experience, lose our hair. Our parents die, our children leave home. The seven year itch is not just the name of a funny play... PASSAGES is readable and informative for anyone who is planning to live through 'middleleescense'... a reassuring picture of normal behavior patterns." —Niki Nymark, St. Louis Post-Dispatch

"The month before I turned 30, every day seemed to bring on a more virulent case of the 'morning terrors'... I was dissatisfied with my looks, my job, with my husband, with my children—but also with their increasing independence from me... If instead of throwing a party I had been able to sit down and spend the evening reading Gail Sheehy's PASSAGES, I'm convinced my feelings about aging would have been less hysterical—and perhaps even tempered with hope and anticipation." —Barbara Cady, Los Angeles Times

"Between 35 and 45, we commonly discover mortality as a fact, not an abstraction... That is, we are well away in the 'Midlife Crisis,' an emotional event as predictable as the onset of puberty, and as stormy. From this beginning, Sheehy worked backward and forward to delineate the other stages of adult development... The result is the kind of good grown-up talk—memory, rumination, speculation—that irresistibly invites the reader to join in... written by an adult for other adults." —Sara Sanborn, New York Times Book Review

"As one who recently turned 50, and felt marooned and alone in a decade that no one had ever reached in quite the way I had, I found that I was described herein. I'm not unique. That demonstration is the great achievement of PASSAGES... The hope, wit, and demythification of adulthood that permeates Sheehy's book make PASSAGES a work of revelation for the layman as he tries to understand the inevitable movement of his life. It is a stunning accomplishment." —Roderick MacLeish, Washington Post

"This book has captured for all time what adult life in America is like in the 1970s." —William T. Keough, Philadelphia Bulletin

If winning is really everything, the price of victory is too damn high.

He's 14, stands 5'-7" and weighs 122 pounds. In the rigidly enforced age/weight classification system common to youth football leagues, that's too heavy for the junior division. So he'll have to compete in the senior division, against boys who weigh up to 145 pounds.

And that could mean the difference between being a star and an average player.

So he goes on a crash diet. For three days he consumes only liquids. He runs laps with a plastic trash bag over his jersey to force his body to sweat.

And when a coach gives him a diuretic pill, he takes it.

Later that night the boy feels sick, and his parents find out why.

His father laments, "One reason I let my son play football is because I heard that kids who're in sports don't get into trouble, don't get involved with drugs."

Fueled by indignation, the story bursts into news on KRC-TV, Washington, D.C.

A bewildered coach explains, "Let's face it. It's a competitive world, and football prepares kids for life."

But is winning really everything?

Some parents apparently think so. Why else would a father curse his nine-year old son for missing a tackle? Why else would a mother stick her finger down her son's throat to induce vomiting in a desperate effort to make him lose weight?

For the full story of what happened in one community's youth league—and may be happening in your own—be sure to read Pee Wee Poppers in the December issue of SPORT.

A lot more than just the score.

Geneticist Sets Out to Breed a Perfect Elm, Beautiful and Shady but Disease-Resistant

MILLBROOK, N.Y.—Armed with a microscope, a warm greenhouse, millions of tiny elm seeds and a lot of patience, a young scientist at the Carey Arboretum here is seeking the answer to a problem that may take him 20 years to solve—if he can ever solve it.

Dr. David Karnosky, a 27-year-old forest geneticist on the arboretum staff, is trying to breed the perfect elm tree.

He wants to produce an elm that is beautiful and yet hardy enough to withstand the ravages of the Dutch elm disease, the fungus infection that has killed hundreds of thousands of American elms around the country and threatens the rest.

Dr. Karnosky would like to see a species that does not yet exist—a tree with the graceful crown and the larger leaves and the shade-giving shape of the American elm, but without its susceptibility to disease.

He would prefer an elm with some of the attributes of the Asian species that are highly resistant to Dutch elm disease. But he would do without their smaller leaves and their tendency toward scraggly crowns because they would not provide the shade and the elegant ornamentation of the American elm that has added its gentle grace to the streets and lawns of thousands of

Birmingham's New Image: Art Center

WAYNE KING
Special to The New York Times

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—The gathering of a group of Birmingham artists in a rooming room of a Birmingham hotel one day last week seemed more appropriate to San Francisco than Birmingham. Agam, fresh from signing his latest work, a 10-by-30-foot relief on the facade of the city's Eye Hospital, dined with members of the city's substantial arts community. He chatted with curators, artists, sketching portraits, plates, raising their heads at a set of Wedgwood the evening by doing by painting on a guest's napkin, adding his signature under the arm.

An Israeli who lives in a household world in this is well known in Europe to Calder and Picasso. He an entire room, for example of art that one walks into, Palace.

His three-story stainless steel "Tree" stands outside School at Lincoln Center. Birmingham has changed one of Mr. Agam's kinetic pieces much of the 1960's Birmingham was synonymous with poverty, repression and violence, racially inspired bombings, the nickname "Bomb City," its best known citizen Eugene Connor, the police commissioner who was known as "Bull" and who used cattle prods, fire-hoses and police dogs against peaceful black demonstrators. "I did not shout, 'Git them niggers,'" he once complained to a reporter about an alleged misquotation. "I said, 'git—I don't say 'git.'"

The Legacy of Bull Connor

That vague yearning for respectability may be all that is left of the legacy of Bull Connor, now deceased. Racially, Birmingham is now indistinguishable from, say, Dayton, Ohio.

The image of racial intransigence, however dated, still haunts the city, and because its major industry is steel, it has also been regarded as something of a southern fried Pittsburgh.

But—in no small measure because of the efforts of Mrs. David H. Roberts, the wife of a coal miner owner and the city's prime mover in the arts—the old image is giving way to a new one: Birmingham as a leading Southern center for the arts, the chief competitor to Atlanta.

Coinciding with the signing of the new Agam piece, the city's 17-year-old museum conducted the largest show of his work ever presented in the United States.

"It's really astonishing when you realize that 25 years ago, there was not even a museum here," said John Farmer, the young director of the Birmingham Museum. "No museum and no collectors."

While the Agam show was going on, exhibits featuring various artists opened on the same day at the University of Alabama at Birmingham, Birmingham Southern, Samford University, the Jamison and Altamont galleries and several smaller galleries. The Birmingham Arts Alliance was holding a jury show and there were exhibits at city hospitals, which have continuous displays, usually the work of local artists. Birmingham's business and financial community is also deeply involved in collecting and displaying art.

Supporting Arts Is 'With It'

"Well, of course, there is an awful lot of money coming in here," Mrs. Roberts said, "and a realization that there is a limit to how much one can spend on furs and Cadillacs, and that if you don't support the arts, well, you 'just ain't with it.'"

The connection between art and racial turmoil is curious, but in Birmingham it seems more than tenuous.

"I feel the ferment in the arts here is a backlash of the civil rights movement," said Dr. Alston Callahan, a renowned eye surgeon who founded the Eye Foundation Hospital and the man who commissioned the $43,000 Agam work, paid for by gifts of three prominent Birmingham businessmen.

"We had such a terrible image," he continued. "We had to do something about it. We got rid of Bull Connor and then people began to pay their civic dues; it was a compensation."

Of Birmingham's several flourishing galleries, the most conspicuously successful is one called "The Little House on Linden Street," which until a few years ago was just that, a single small frame house. Now it occupies three buildings, filled floor to ceiling with

The New York Times/Gary Settle

Yaacov Agam, an Israeli artist, rearranging one of his stainless steel sculptures at Birmingham Museum of Art works that range from modest pieces by local and regional artists to those bearing the signatures of Dali, Miro, Chagall, Rouault.

The proprietor, Gene Smith, who said that he had been named after Bull Connor, puts special effort into promoting young local artists. His three current favorites are all graduates of the University of Alabama, all in their mid-20's and all from small towns in Alabama. They are Frank Fleming from Bear Creek, Nail Hollis from Arab and Bill Nance from Ensley.

Mr. Hollis, who works primarily in pen and ink and signs himself simply "Nail", recently had a very successful show in Nice, France. Mr. Nance, who works often in castoff materials for his "constructions," teaches at Alabama A & M at Huntsville.

"But I think if you hear of any young Southern artist in the next few years, it will be Frank Fleming," Mr. Smith said. Mr. Fleming, who works almost exclusively in unadorned white porcelain, creates whimsical pieces that duplicate the texture of lace, leather, brick, or other materials.

News Summary

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1976

International

Israeli Army, Prime Minister Rabin said, should be authorized to enter southern area of Lebanon. Mr. Rabin made the announcement at a news conference in Tel Aviv.

Rosalind Russell, the epitome of wit and sophistication as an actress on the stage and screen, died of cancer at her home in Beverly Hills, Calif. She was 63. Miss Russell is perhaps most fondly remembered for her interpretation of Auntie Mame, the madcap character in Patrick Dennis's novel of that name. [1:3-4.]

Metropolitan

An 18-year-old student was charged with the murder of his parents, Harry W. F. and Mary Jane De La Roche, and two younger brothers at their home in Montvale, N.J. The parents and the two children, Eric John, 12, and Ronald Ernest, 15, were shot to death. Harry De La Roche Jr., who was charged with the murders, was said to be a student at the Citadel, a military college in Charleston, S.C. [1:1-3.]

The Nation, the 111-year-old, liberal weekly journal published in New York City, is being sold to Thomas B. Morgan, who resigned last month as editor of The Village Voice. There is a purchase agreement between Mr. Morgan and James J. Storrow Jr., The Nation's publisher. It is said that the 50-year-old Mr. Morgan will spend $100,000 to $150,000 to acquire ownership. [1:4.]

Ruben Gonzales, 34, died of severe burns suffered in the blast eight days ago at the American Chicle Company's plant in Long Island City, Queens. Two others among the more than 45 injured died last week, and 15 are still struggling for life. [30:1-2.]

National

President Carter's 9-year-old daughter, Amy, attended the predominantly white Stevens public school when her family moves there. Her mother made the announcement in Americus, Ga., through press secretary. [1:1.]

The administration will be asked to provide a $3.5 billion program to create and improve deteriorating cities. "This is more than a tax cut," Hans E. J. Saks, president of the National Urban League, said at the opening of a Denver convention. [1:2.]

Life insurance policies issued by a growing number of companies, which are underwrit-

Business/Finance

Most investment bankers and bond traders seem to believe that they have not yet reached bottom despite the drop last week of most interest rates to their lowest levels in several years. Their views will be tested this week on three fronts: when the Treasury sells $2.5 billion of 49-month notes tomorrow, when the Bell System markets $150 million of bonds Wednesday and when Hawaii offers a $75 million issue of bonds Thursday. [43:6.]

Loans in hard currency from oil-producing countries of the Middle East are increasingly sought by Communist governments in Eastern Europe. International banking sources say that the money is wanted to buy advanced technology in the West. Rumania, for example, is negotiating a sizable loan with Kuwait to finance the purchase of industrial equipment. [43:1.]

Ways to take advantage of a powerful marketing tool that would enable mutual funds to use fund assets to promote new sales is the principal topic in the beleaguered industry. Mutual fund operators until now have only dreamed of using their assets that way. Several proposals that might turn the dream into reality emerged during four days of hearings last week at the headquarters of the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington. [43:5.]

The electronics industry in this country has been hit hard by imports that have cut into its radio and television market and other changes that have brought diminution, not growth. From 1969 to 1972 it is estimated that 1,129,000 electronics workers lost their jobs because of plant closings. What has happened to these workers? Part of that can be found in interviews with former employees of the Emerson Electric Company's television and radio plant in Jersey City, where 1,000 production workers were laid off in 1970. Emerson has since been relying on a plant in Taiwan. [43:2.]

Air France has raised a fuss with the French Government, its principal stockholder, charging that excessive state interference is mainly responsible for losses that have made it the biggest money loser among Western Europe's airlines. [43:2-4.]

Steelers Keep Playoff Hope Alive, Beat Bengals, 7-3, in Snow and Ice on Harris Tally

WILLIAM N. WALLACE
 Special to The New York Times
PITTSBURGH, Nov. 28—A fumble on a snowy field cost the Cincinnati Bengals a game today, and the Pittsburgh Steelers became far greater down the National Football League's list. The fumble, by Boobie Clark, the way for the Pittsburgh to score a touchdown and win, in such primitive conditions of the skills of football were won and what else mattered. Chuck Noll, the Steelers' coach, said he was right. The victory was the seventh in a row for the Pittsburgh team and the outcome cut the Bengals' lead over the Steelers from two games to one in the Central Division of the American Conference.

 Pittsburgh's won-lost record is now 8-4 and Cincinnati's 9-3. If the Bengals had won they would have clinched the division title and eliminated the Steelers from playoff qualification.
 Pittsburgh has two games left against impotent teams, Tampa Bay and Houston, and the way the Steelers are going they should win them both. Cincinnati must play the Raiders, the Western Division champions, in Oakland a week from tomorrow night and the Jets in New York on the last day of the season, Dec. 12.

If Cincinnati lost once more and ended in a tie with Pittsburgh, the Steelers would go to the playoffs and the Bengals would go home. Why? The tie would break in Pittsburgh's favor because the Steelers beat the Bengals twice this season.
 If the Bengals did not lose again, the Steelers would go home. They could end with the same won-lost record as the New England Patriots of the Eastern Division but the wild-card position in the playoffs—the one that goes to the second-place team in the conference's three divisions with the best record—would belong to the Patriots. Why? The tie would break for them because they beat the Steelers on Sept.

26 when Pittsburgh was still reflecting on its Super Bowl triumphs of the last two seasons.
 So the fumble by Clark, the fullback, in the 12th minute of the third quarter today was more than a mistake. It was a disaster.
 Dwight White, a Steeler defensive end, fell on the ball at the Cincinnati 24 and four plays later Franco Harris bulled his way into the Bengal end zone.
 The way the snow was coming down, it seemed unlikely that either side could score again. But each almost did. The Bengals held the Steelers at the Cincinnati 2 on fourth down, and near the end Kenny Anderson's last two completed passes took the Bengals to the Steelers' 26 but no farther.

 The game had two distinct parts. The first half was played on a dry field and each side felt out the other. The offenses were conservative, the defenses dominant. The only score was a 40-yard field goal by the Bengals' Chris Bahr.
 Noll, who could afford to be expansive, thought it was a shame that the snow, which began to fall at halftime, wrecked the last two quarters. "On a field like that," he said, "reactions disappear. Runners can't run. Receivers can't cut. Pass rushers can't rush."

Now! Two big $253 Specials from AMC, the small car specialist.

Unlike the other manufacturers, who build cars of all sizes, AMC is exclusively a small car producer. Therefore, we have a lot at stake on the success of small cars.

At American Motors, we're doing something about it. By attacking the problem in the most direct way we know how. By initiating pricing programs designed to save you a lot of money.

Recently, the small car market has diminished substantially. Over the last five years, increased costs have forced prices up more than $1,000. As a result, American car buyers have pretty much stayed away, not only from AMC small cars, but from all small cars.

Our goal is to increase our sales volume by encouraging you, the car buyer, to return to the small car market. If we can get you to consider a small car, we're confident that the small car you buy will be an AMC.

Poodle Best at Atlantic City

By WALTER R. FLETCHER
Special to The New York Times

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., Nov. 28—An elegant black poodle, Ch. Bel Tor Blisful, owned by Mary Peacock of Chester Springs, Pa., and Pamela Hall of Mahopac, N.Y., was named best of 3,494 dogs in Convention Hall today at the Boardwalk Kennel Club fixture. It was the largest show to be held in the East this year.

It was the sixth top award for the 2½-year-old poodle.

"She has the beautiful dark eye one looks for in the breed, nice low set ears, she's in excellent coat and was beautifully presented," said Henry Stoeker, who chose her for the prize. "She's really an exceptional specimen of the breed."

It was high praise, indeed, for Stoeker, when he was handling in the 1930's and 1940's, showed poodles to more than 50 best-in-show awards.

Peke Is Commended, Too

On the way to the final, Bliss was named for her 25th blue rosette. It was a particularly strong lineup that faced Stoeker for every dog had been a best-in-show performer.

"It was a close decision," said the judge. "The Pekinese was a really strong contender."

The Peke was Ch. Yank Kee Bernard.

Finn Takes Big Lead in British Auto Rally

BATH, England, Nov. 28 (AP)—Pentti Arikkala of Finland carved out a commanding lead at the halfway stage of the British Royal Automobile Club auto rally tonight.

As the tired crews struggled through the gale-force winds and torrential rain, the compulsory overnight rest here, the 31-year-old Finn scored his private 4½ seconds ahead of his rivals.

In second place was Britain's Roger Clark in another Ford Escort. Third was Sweden's Stig Blomqvist in a Saab. Large crowds lined the route. Rally organizers canceled one section on the borders of the mountainous Lake District because they considered there were too many onlookers.

Stony Brook Conquers Baruch Five by 86-70
Stony Brook scored 10 straight points in the first half, led by 37-25 at intermission and went on to defeat Baruch 86-70, in a nonleague basketball game here yesterday.

Larry Thilly's 20 points led the Patriots' balanced attack. The game's highest scorer was Baruch's John Steuer with 22.

Advertising Ads on Supermarket Shopping Carts

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

Because an ad inside a supermarket would give a package-goods company one last chance to influence a purchase, any number of entrepreneurs have attempted over the years to design in-store media.

They have ranged from the simple to the complex, from mere posters to complicated electronic systems that would combine in-store security with closed-circuit TV commercial messages.

Then along came Bruce Failing of Westhampton Beach, L.I., who once operated a string of dry cleaning shops, was executive director of the Long Island Duck Association and became marketing director of a Boston meat-packing company.

Although his idea—ads on shopping carts—is not new, Mr. Failing seems to be succeeding. His company is attracting scores of major advertisers and is expanding its coverage areas.

Actmedia, as the company is called, will move into the Los Angeles market in January, having operated for the last three years in New England, parts of New York State and Atlanta.

"We're not in Metro New York, mainly because it's a beast, but we're targeting it for May 1977," said Bruce Failing Jr., 29 years old, who joined his father as executive vice president right after he picked up his M.B.A. degree from Harvard.

What might be the secret of Actmedia's success is that it is properly capitalized and researched. Bruce Jr., who had taught financing at Dartmouth's Tuck School before entering Harvard, has raised some $2 million, the most recent piece of which came from the sale of 20 percent of the company to an insurance company, a number of banks and two individuals.

As to the research, Actmedia never even moved into New England until it had been tested in supermarkets in central New York with the help of a friendly Cornell professor and some students. Research there showed that on-cart advertisers were averaging 15 percent sales gains and research continues.

In an interview the other day the younger Mr. Failing, accompanied by John H. Stevenson, director of marketing, said the very heart of the operation was the field force.

Actmedia, he said, has a 300-woman uniformed force that uses company-supplied cars, with each woman servicing and maintaining carts in about 60 stores. They install the plastic devices on the fronts of carts and they change the ads. Up to now the ads have been 6 inches by 8 inches, with two to a cart. In Los Angeles they are going to be 8 by 10. If a supermarket has 150 carts, each advertiser gets 30 ads. Actmedia carries 12 noncompeting advertisers per region per cycle.

A cycle is eight weeks. The advertising rates are based on store traffic, details of which are obtained from cash-register transactions. The rate is 83 cents per 1,000 impressions, with the theory being that anyone going through the store will get an impression.

It costs an average of $300 to equip each store, and afterward the stores get 20 percent of the gross advertising revenues.

Now for the name dropping: Actmedia, a commissionable medium, has on its client list such heavyweight advertisers as Colgate-Palmolive, Lever, General Foods, General Mills, Gillette, Carnation, Scott Paper, Clorox and Drackett.

Currently, the younger Mr. Failing said, Actmedia is in about 2,000 of the country's 30,000 supermarkets. He said the company would consider itself national when it had signed up enough supermarkets in the 30 top markets to reach 75 to 80 percent of the households in them. He expects to reach that point in June 1978. Why not?

Fortune's Minor Changes

There were rumbles a while back that Fortune magazine was contemplating major changes in format and frequency. Its management, however, explained that such rumors must have come out of the periodic reviews conducted by that Time Inc. property.

Well, the December issue does have some changes—but nothing overwhelming. For one thing, every major story is now jumping to the back of the book. There are also a few new features, such as "Keeping Up," made up of brief items of interest. Another new feature, "Bed and Board," will begin in January. It will cover "attractive" hotels and restaurants "off the beaten track," which Fortune describes as such places as Peoria or Sioux City.

Agency for Bank Concern

Keyes, Martin & Company of Springfield, N. J., has just picked up the account of United Jersey Banks, Hackensack. The client, which has 12 banks and four other financial companies, spends more than $1.5 million a year for advertising and sales promotion.

TV Compensation Plan

TAT Communications, the production and distribution company of Norman Lear, has devised a new form of compensation for a television series it will launch next spring. The plan is designed to make success in the ratings more profitable.

The five-days-a-week series, "All That Glitters," is described by the company as a white-collar version of its blue-collar "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman." Under the plan, a station will pay for each one-time use of a program segment, as done for other shows, but TAT will keep 30 seconds of the six minutes of commercial time to sell off itself. That is how success in the ratings will pay off, since ad rates are based on ratings. TAT will use its current sales force to sell this two and a half minutes a week.

Campaign for Toy Safety

Inspired by a line from "Santa Claus Is Coming to Town," McDonald & Little, Atlanta, has created a "You'd Better Watch Out" public service campaign for the United States Consumer Product Safety Commission. Advertising has been prepared in both English and Spanish for print and radio. The ads seek to educate consumers about buying safe toys for children.

heating oil—technically known as middle distillate—from controls last spring, a number of legislators, led by representatives from the Northeast, which has been suffering most from the high cost of imported oil, insisted on a monitoring system to assess accurately whether the new pricing freedom was leading to unwarranted increases.

Indexes Revised Upward

Frank G. Zarb, the F. E. A. administrator, agreed and now the agency calculates each week its estimate of what the selling price should be, after taking into account seasonal variations as well as new increases in petroleum or non-petroleum costs. If the price of heating oil rises more than 2 cents above this index figure, the F. E. A. has said that it will hold hearings on proposed remedial actions.

The F. E. A.'s announcement also noted that in the Northeast, heating oil prices, although currently high by national standards at 39.9 cents for the week ending Nov. 13, are still 1.9 below the "trigger" calculated for the region.

Because index numbers have been revised upward as winter draws closer, this comparison masks the real upward movement in heating oil prices. Since June, prices have risen by 1.5 cents nationally and by 1.7 cents in the Northeast.

Heating oil prices tend to rise in the fall as a result of pre-winter demand. The F. E. A. announcement also contended that in the Northeast, prices have been affected by a higher cost of imported refined heating oil.

Despite the F. E. A.'s contention that decontrol 2 is working, some consumer groups remain unconvinced.

"There's enough of a price rise here for both the F. E. A. and the Congress to take a good look before we can determine whether the downward pressure on prices that the F. E. A. predicted really happened," said James F. Flug, director and counsel of the Energy Action Committee. "The question is not so much the absolute numbers as who's doing what and why."

The F. E. A. acknowledged in its release that the most recent weekly figures are estimates and that subsequent revision could increase the reported figures by one-tenth to four-tenths of a cent per gallon.

ORDERS INCREASE FOR MACHINE TOOLS

Dealers Report an Advance of 100.3% Over the Depressed Levels of October 1975

By GENE SMITH
 Orders for new machine tools in October rose up 100.3 percent from the depressed levels of October 1975, the National Machine Tool Builders' Association reported over the weekend.
 Orders, reaching $239.8 million, were 5.7 percent higher than orders in September. As a result, cumulative orders through October rose by $1.2 billion to $1.76 billion, the trade association reported.
 However, October shipments at $163.5 billion trailed the year-ago level by 21 percent and were 12.8 percent lower than in September. The cumulative total of shipments of new machine tools fell 19 percent to $1.67 billion in the first 10 months of the year.
 The report meant that the inventory position for machine tools reached $1.63 billion as of Oct. 31, up $75.9 million over the final September level. Inventories have been rising for several months, with the gain amounting to $20.8 million since the end of the year.

Used Tool Sales Up Sharply
 Machinery Dealers National Association, which keeps statistics on sales of used machine tools, said that October sales "climbed sharply" to an index level the second highest month in its history. (The index is based on average monthly sales in 1972 taken as 100). The high of 188.1 was recorded in April 1975.

The trade association said that the October level indicated an increase in dollar sales of 29.7 percent over September. It said sales up 14.6 percent. The dollar value of dealers' inventories slipped 2.9 percent from September.
 Compared with October 1975, the dollar value of sales was 21.7 percent higher with unit sales up 5.2 percent. The dollar value of inventories was 10.7 percent higher than a year ago and the number of units in inventory was 6.1 percent higher.

October orders for new tools in October were 98.5 percent ahead of the year-ago level and 11.8 percent higher than in September, while sales for export were 100.3 percent higher than in October 1975 and 14 percent lower than in September.

Overhaul Is Due for Statistics on Joblessness

 Fundamental changes that could fundamentally alter all current concepts of unemployment statistics are to be designated by President Ford and the expectation that Mr. Ford will leave their selection to his successor. Cabinet members and leading members of Congress from both parties are also to sit on the panel.

Trouble with all this, in terms of immediate questions about the reliability of job data, is that it will take years at a minimum and more than three years before the commission's recommendations are fully considered.

As he is over the decision of the study group, Mr. Shiskin's intention of waiting several months to shore up weaknesses in the system.

He has repeatedly told the Joint Economic Committee, legislative requests for all types of data bearing on employment have taken such a jump in recent years that they have exceeded our capacity to what is wanted," he said last week. It is not a money problem so much as it is one of technical knowledge already seeking to enlist the aid of the states in a joint effort to reconcile and improve present methods of collecting and appraising information supplied by employers. New job benchmarks are to be set at the Federal level early to correct national employment statistics he considers still too low, especially in construction.

Some of these benchmarks will be wider than the 1.3 million spread between the national total of 79.8 million jobs and the smaller sum of state figures from which it is derived. "We are pressing for a like mad to adjust their estimates to conform with our new benchmarks," Shiskin said. "They have a lot of time because there is no way to allow for corporate adjustments without the adjustment expertise shown us is needed in a recovery."

Governors are likely to resist proposed change, especially in areas that would lose Federal grants for service jobs and other emergency employment. But criticism of proposed changes in computation also comes from experts with a fiscal stake in the volume of unemployment.

Professor Modigliani of M.I.T. said that "nobody does enough to get on to the unreliability of the adjustments and other factors that prevent figures which the public so seriously."

He said the wiggles in the employment figures are just noise. He said he might publish very abundant data to show the limits of the data so that it will not be led astray by the kind of things that have caused slipping and flopping."

Mr. Modigliani gave assurance to the American Economic Association that it would cooperate in any desired new study commission. The association's president-elect for 1976, Lawrence W. Klein of the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School, is expected to take a similar position. He is President-elect Carter's economic adviser.

Before things get worse, send for our free TV Squeeze Survival Kit.

What's new on the Squeeze? Not much. All three networks remain virtually sold out of prime time through next year's third quarter, at prices 20% to 30% over last year. Prime time, daytime or fringe, it continues to be a runaway seller's market.

Clearly, things aren't getting better. But 1977 deadlines are getting shorter.

That's why Newsweek has put together this handy TV Squeeze Kit. It's filled with facts and figures and useful information that can help you not only survive in the TV Squeeze, but actually come out ahead of the game.

Here's what it includes:

1. The TV Squeeze. How to beat it.

This comprehensive guide, based on Newsweek's new multi-media presentation, follows television from its infancy up through the current years. You'll see how the Squeeze happened. You'll learn what sensible alternatives exist.

2. The Magazine/Television Mix in a New Perspective.

This brochure discusses how print and television complement each other. Drawing on the recent W. R. Simmons study, "Media Imperatives," it shows how magazines and TV, when used in combination, can give you more GRPs for your money while decreasing your cost per thousand impressions.

3. A Guide to National Media.

This pocket guide puts television and magazine costs and figures right at your fingertips.

4. Reprints of selected Newsweek advertisements.

In these informative ads, Newsweek analyzes the actual media schedules of companies that advertise heavily in television, and shows how adding more magazines can help increase GRPs without an increase in budget.

5. Your official Newsweek lemon (or lime) squeezer.

Perfect for taking out your TV Squeeze frustrations.

The TV Squeeze Survival Kit is yours, absolutely free—compliments of Newsweek. Write us on your business letterhead, or just fill out the coupon and mail it today. It's your first step towards beating the Squeeze.

We're big for our age because we're right for our age.

Psychology Today circulation

Source: Ziff-Davis Publishing Co.

We're big for our age:

Psychology Today is only nine years old. Yet in that short time its circulation has climbed to 1,150,000. Phenomenal growth like this doesn't happen by chance. It can only result when a magazine meets the needs and desires of a large segment of the population.

We're right for our age:

The last decade has seen social changes that have had significant impact on traditional American ideas. New values have emerged. A concern with physical self-enhancement, a blurring of male and female roles. A new perspective toward work and play. All around us we see a new concern with one's self, with one's own contentment. And a desire for a richer, fuller life.

These new values have been embraced by a new generation of adults and have set off trends which will have important marketing implications.

Daniel Yankelovich, noted social scientist and researcher, put it this way: "These new values make all the difference in the world in the kinds of products that people buy, in the way they use these products, in retailing patterns, in uses of discretionary income, in leisure time, in work attitudes that affect them as employees, in attitudes toward companies that affect people as consumers. In every conceivable way."

Why Psychology Today?

Psychology Today is a natural reflection of this change in values. It's the one magazine that addresses itself to the subjects and interests that are meaningful to these people in the way they live. No wonder its circulation has climbed to 1,150,000 in just nine years. No wonder 4 1/2 million* educated, affluent readers turn to Psychology Today every month.

These readers are creating markets for quality products and services of virtually every description. Talk to them in the magazine they listen to. Psychology Today. It's right for your time.
